

inspiration to all of us here in Washington and it gives me a great deal of pleasure to have dwelled on this particular subject at greater length to those participating in this great tribute to CLEM ZABLOCKI.

It was particularly fitting that Governor Reynolds, of Wisconsin, would personally participate in the tribute to CLEM. The Governor joined the others present in extolling the impressive record of accomplishment that CLEM ZABLOCKI brings, not only to the people of his congressional district in Wisconsin, but yes, Mr. Speaker, to all the people of America.

It was with a deep sense of pride that I observed during this tribute to CLEM the abiding sense of purpose in the American cause that CLEM ZABLOCKI brings to this Congress and to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, Congressman ZABLOCKI was overwhelmed by the tribute paid him and the truly humble spirit of this great American was best reflected in his own remarks which concluded this very impressive banquet.

I should like to take this privilege to incorporate these remarks in the RECORD today because they so eloquently describe the greatness of our colleague from Wisconsin's Second Congressional District.

Mr. Speaker, Congressman ZABLOCKI's remarks follow:

REMARKS OF ACCEPTANCE BY HON. CLEMENT J. ZABLOCKI AT A TESTIMONIAL DINNER GIVEN IN HIS HONOR BY THE DEPARTMENT OF WISCONSIN, POLISH LEGION OF AMERICAN VETERANS, SUNDAY, MARCH 31, 1963

Congressman Pucinski, Governor Reynolds, Mr. Firmin, Mr. Borkowski, Commander Bieganowski, Department Commander Nedwesi, Mrs. Wozniak, Mrs. Zalewski, Reverend Taterczynski, the Madrigal Singers of Alverno College, and friends, some of you may remember that recently there was an attempt to name a library for me. At the time, I said it didn't seem like a good idea since public buildings are usually named for deceased persons and I was not dead yet. Tonight I am not sure whether I am really still alive. Sitting here and listening to these tributes is a little like attending one's own funeral.

Seriously, I am sincerely happy to be alive and here to receive this honorary membership citation in the Polish Legion of American Veterans. It is an honor which will be remembered and cherished always.

I only wish my wife could have been here tonight to share in these warm and wonderful proceedings. Unfortunately she could not be present.

This tribute you have paid is not, I know, purely a personal one. It is a tribute to the office I hold as Representative to the Congress of the United States, the most powerful lawmaking body on the face of the earth. It is my privilege to hold this post by the grace of God and the unstinting hard work of my family, friends, and acquaintances, many of them here tonight. I know you will forgive a personal privilege, if I single out my mother and present her to you. I attribute much to her for what I am.

To you, my friends, belongs the real praise, for you have aided me without thought of gain or personal privilege. You have trusted that I would represent you in the Halls of Congress as you would want to be represented, and I hope that I have not betrayed your trust.

I am proud to accept this tribute because to me it signifies in a true sense the basic purpose of the PLAV. Your organization's efforts to promote good citizenship and Americanism are well known.

You honor me not as one of Polish ancestry or solely for having assisted Poland in some way, but to inspire and encourage others to seek service in Government and participate in Government. And that is as it should be. For while we are proud of our national backgrounds, we are prouder still to be Americans, citizens of one of history's great nations.

Our American way of life presupposes a pluralism of racial, national and religious backgrounds. We have a country which is truly unified in its diversities. To my mind it would indeed be a tragic day for our country if all Americans conformed to the same customs, manners and culture. We are not meant to be poured out of one mold.

It is a pleasure and privilege for me to work with Congressman ROMAN PUCINSKI in Congress, one of the most heterogeneous groups in our Nation. Congressmen are of varied national backgrounds, hold varied political, philosophical and religious beliefs. They come from all parts of our Nation. The interchange of ideas and wisdom which takes place on Capitol Hill is in no small measure due to the diverse backgrounds of our national representatives.

We can be proud that our country is a melting pot; that each national group has made its contribution to our life and culture. But the process is far from over. There is still much that can be contributed to America by all of us who are interested in preserving for posterity the traditions and culture of our native lands.

As members of the PLAV you have chosen not only to preserve the heritage of America, and attend to the welfare of your fellow veterans and our way of life, but also the glories and triumphs of Poland. The latter you are conveying to your children, and sharing with those who might otherwise never know about them. In doing this you are promoting Americanism just as if you were once again fighting for the freedoms we hold so dear.

Further you are engaged in promoting a better understanding of the real image of Poland and the people of that great nation. Your organization is dedicated: to the restoration of individual human dignity to the unfortunate enslaved brethren; you are dedicated to the liberation of Poland from Communist domination and you are determined that Poland will return to the family of free nations where she rightfully belongs, for Poland has contributed much to the development and culture of the West.

I am confident your work and the efforts of all understanding citizens of this great country of ours will not be in vain.

As a Christian nation, soon to commemorate its millennium of Christendom, Poland will never succumb to the pressures and wiles of communism. Poland will be free. Her people will again rise and rejoice. Their voices will again glorify God in thanksgiving and in supplication that freedom shall be through all ages and forever theirs.

To this end not only your organization but all of us are committed. Ours is a great challenge. But our task is not insurmountable. May we be inspired with the zeal and dedication to fulfill our obligation.

In closing, may I again express my sincere gratitude to all of you.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MARCH 14, 1963

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Father Joseph A. Baran, St. Michael's Church, Lansford, Pa., offered the following prayer:

Lord, Eternal God, by whose grace America is free and by whose inspiration we freely choose our government and, even during these highly crucial times, enjoy a flourishing of culture, spiritual creativity, and economic welfare, we beseech Thee, in Thy infinite goodness, to bless our President, our Congress, and the whole American people without regard to race, color, and creed.

Humbly we invoke Thee to look upon us mercifully as we daily pray for those countries of many millions of people which have contributed to the strength of America. Among these countries is Slovakia, a country in the heart of Europe, which today cannot freely commemorate the grand and significant anniversaries of its own glorious history. Slovakia cannot commemorate, in a manner that is fitting and just to glorify, O Lord in the highest, Thy greatness, the year 863 when the saintly brothers Cyril and Methodius, the messengers of the holy Christian mission, came into the territory of Slovakia to spread the gospel of truth in a language intelligible to the people of that country. Therefore, do we gratefully recall this great Slovak anniversary and thank Thee, Lord Almighty, Lord of the strong and the weak, Lord of the great and small nations, that Thou hast granted us the grace to live to see this happy day.

We are also happy to recall, in this House of Representatives, the 24th anniversary of the Proclamation of Independence of the Slovak nation by its duly elected representatives which happens to be this very day. Together with over 2 million Americans of Slovak descent we pray Thee, O merciful and just God, grant wisdom and courage to all free men and freedom-loving peoples, so that they might lend a helping hand to this worthy, long-suffering Christian country of the Slovak Nation to regain its liberty and freedom.

May all human malice disappear, may the forces of good, of right, and justice tear asunder the curtain of iron and steel and, under Thy protection, O God of mercy, may America and Slovakia flourish to Thy greater honor and glory. In the name of our Lord, who liveth and reigneth for all eternity. Amen.

Let us remember in a silent prayer Congressman CLYDE DOYLE.

In the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Amen.

Mr. ARENDS. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois, Monday is Consent Calendar Day. There are also two suspensions: First, H.R. 4715, the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation; and, second, H.R. 2826, taxes, disposition of property.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I have announced all the program that is ready for floor action next week, as of now. We may have further announcements sometime next week.

Mr. GROSS. We got up a pretty good head of steam yesterday and it was my hope that the leadership could keep the legislative machinery rolling, at least until the Easter recess, so that we could get out of here this year before October 13 or 15, or whatever the date was last year.

Mr. ALBERT. I think the gentleman will be satisfied when we will have finished this session that we will have enacted a very substantial amount of very important legislation.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman thinks we can get away sometime about August 1?

Mr. ALBERT. I hope so.

Mr. GROSS. I would like to do a little fishing this year, but unless Congress gets down to work I will again be deprived of that pleasure.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, without establishing a precedent, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House desiring to do so may extend their remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Speaker may extend his own remarks at this point in the RECORD on the subject of St. Patrick's Day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, there is some historical doubt about the place and date of St. Patrick's birth. There is no doubt whatever about the charm and force of his saintly personality, the magnificence of his lifetime achievement, or the enthusiasm with which his feast day is celebrated in Ireland, and by those of Irish descent, as well as countless others, everywhere in the world.

People frequently announce, with an air of surprise, that St. Patrick was not an Irishman. Irish people know, and Catholics know, that St. Patrick was the Apostle of Ireland; and the apostle of a country, in common understanding, is someone who has come from outside into a country, bringing the faith, as St. Boniface to Germany, or St. Francis Xavier to the Indies. In many countries, a native-born saint is adopted as patron, and many other saints, elsewhere. Ireland, however, has so great a debt to St. Patrick, and so great a love for him, that his place as patron saint of Ireland is assured forever.

Young Patrick, taken captive by pirates, and sold into slavery in pagan Ireland, escaped and devoted the rest of his life to the task of redeeming his pagan masters from the slavery of heathen beliefs and of sin. He received his seminary training in the schools of Tours and Lerins, in France, was commissioned by Pope Celestine I to undertake the conversion of Ireland, and consecrated bishop in 442. Even within his own lifetime, he saw that pagan land on fire with the love of God, the love of Christian learning, and a flaming missionary zeal. Out of St. Patrick's example, his preaching, and the efforts of devoted students and holy bishops and priests under his direction, Ireland has acquired and maintained the character of a center of Christian intellectual development and Christian charity, and a prime supplier of Catholic teachers, missionaries, and priests to the rest of the world.

In accordance with Catholic custom, we celebrate on March 17 the occasion of St. Patrick's death, just 1,470 years ago, in the year 493. This was the day on which, according to our belief, he entered into the joys of Heaven, richly merited by his joyful acceptance of God's will for him, his brave and vigorous work for the cause of Christ, and his unflinching love for all of Christ's children.

It is more than the grass under the rain that keeps Ireland green today in the hearts of those that love her—it is the memory, forever green, of that devoted servant of God and lover of humanity, St. Patrick, the man of humility and force, of kindness and courage. Wherever you see, today, the glint of green of a shamrock, or of whatever plant or fabric may do temporary duty as a shamrock, you see a visible sign of the greenness of that memory—the glow of love for the great St. Patrick, and for the land he made a land of glory and beauty and holiness.

The influence of Christian Ireland has been strong in America from early days. Long before the Revolution, in 1737, the Charitable Irish Society was organized and brought into being on St. Patrick's Day, in Boston, to enable the Irish citizens of the town to aid "their poor and indigent countrymen." We have records of the celebration of St. Patrick's Day by the Irish troops maintained in the American Colonies before the Revolution. And St. Patrick's Day obtained a special local, as well as national, significance in 1776, when the British evacuated Boston, and the American troops under George Washington marched in to take possession. Thus our local patriotism, as residents of Boston, our State loyalty, and our national patriotism, are united, in the celebration of Evacuation Day, with honor to St. Patrick, symbol of the Irish ancestry and Catholic faith in which so many of us take pride.

In the early colonial days, we find in history men and women of Irish blood emigrating to the various Colonies of America as early as 1636. Through the decades and generations of colonial and constitutional government, sons and daughters of Ireland have come to America. Their descendants today in our country constitute countless millions of our citizens.

I think it can be said that those of Irish blood, in peace or in war, have been contributors to our progress, and more, have always responded to the service of our country.

As St. Patrick was the crusader for God and mankind in his day, so can we, during this trying period of the world's history, emulate the spirit of St. Patrick in our own lives.

By doing this we will be able to make our greatest contribution to God, country, and mankind.

And it is well that we pause on St. Patrick's Birthday to honor this saint of action, and in our own minds, reflect on the lessons we can learn from his spiritual and dynamic life—making us better persons—making us better Americans.

THE LATE HONORABLE CLYDE DOYLE

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, as senior Representative from California, it is my unpleasant duty to announce to the House the passing of our dear friend and colleague CLYDE DOYLE of the 23d District of California.

The quality of the dedicated life and the invaluable work of CLYDE DOYLE is well known to every Member of this body in which he was serving with great distinction his country, his State, and his constituency.

His death takes from our midst a great American and an outstanding legislator. He was my close, personal friend—a friendship that I valued highly. Although the family and his circle of friends will miss him dearly, we all have the consolation of knowing that he has rendered his country great service and therein left a legacy that all of us could well emulate.

To his beloved wife, Lydia, his daughter, his grandchildren and the other family members, I extend my deepest sympathy.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to have CLYDE DOYLE's official biography inserted at this point in the RECORD.

CLYDE DOYLE RESIDENCE: ONE IN 23D DISTRICT AND ONE IN ARLINGTON, VA.

Congressman and Mrs. Doyle reside at 8949-A State Street, South Gate, where they lease a furnished apartment by the year. Congressman and Mrs. Doyle early purchased a suitable home for themselves at Arlington, Va., only 20 minutes by automobile, driving mostly along the beautiful Potomac River, from his home to his office on Capitol Hill in the New House Office Building, it being necessary for the Congressman to also have a home close by his Washington, D.C., office, as he is necessarily at the Nation's Capitol or working from the Nation's Capitol most of the time.

DOYLE ATTENDANCE ON THE FLOOR OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Los Angeles Times, Tuesday, December 26, 1961, publicized that Congressman CLYDE DOYLE was 1 of only 3 California Congressmen and 1 of only 31 House Members with 100 percent voting records during the first session of the 87th Congress.

Speaker Sam Rayburn, twice as long the Speaker of the House of Representatives as any other man in the history of the U.S. Congress before his untimely decease wrote over his own signature about Congressman CLYDE DOYLE as follows:

"CLYDE DOYLE is one of the most effective men in his committees and also on the floor of the House of Representatives. He is able, he is honest, and he has the facility for expressing himself in such a way as to impress all the Members of the House with his knowledge of the subject in hand. I think CLYDE is one of the very best men we have in the House of Representatives.

"We have shown our confidence in him in many ways."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE and I came to Congress together in the 79th Congress and formed a friendship that was a lasting one. I think it is an enviable thing that when a man passes on as has CLYDE he leaves behind a reputation that no man can say he was ever injured by him or that he ever willingly injured any person. He was a Christian gentleman, a kindly, intelligent man, aggressive, and a loyal public servant. This Congress and the country will be the loser in his untimely passing.

Mrs. Miller and I extend to Mrs. Doyle and the family our sincerest sympathy.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ALBERT].

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was one of the finest friends I have ever had, one of the finest men I have ever known. I have known him well for 17 years. I have known him as a colleague in the House and on committee. I have known him as a great legislator. I have known him as the gentleman he was.

CLYDE DOYLE and I served together on the Select Committee To Investigate Lobbying Activities in the 81st Congress, known as the Buchanan Committee. This was only a few years ago and CLYDE's death reaffirms in my mind the frailty of life on this earth. I am now the sole surviving Democratic member of that committee.

CLYDE DOYLE had rare qualities. He was one of the fairest and most judicious men I have ever known. He insisted that the business of the House be handled according to the rules. He insisted on the rights of witnesses before committees.

He was soft spoken and gentle but inside this kind, considerate, and judicious man there was a deep resolve which, when principles were at stake, could be as hard and as resolute as steel.

There is an emptiness in this Chamber without CLYDE DOYLE. For 19 years he almost invariably sat in the same seat. He was practically always there by the table taking notes. He was perhaps the most attentive Member of the House. He kept personal notes day in and day out on the proceedings and activities of the House, putting down his own observations, his own comments, and establishing a chronology that could never be put into the official records of the House. CLYDE had thousands of pages of notes. He often talked to me about this project. He had planned on his retirement to edit his papers and to put them into a usable form. This would have been an extraordinary document on the Congress. It would have been of extraordinary benefit to students. Those of us who participate in the day-to-day activities of this House know how difficult it is to get across the story of Congress. We know how cold and unconvincing even the best and most scholarly books on the subject generally leave us. In his notes CLYDE has left a lasting memorial to the human side of the House, and an on-the-scene, day-to-day portrait of the type and character and skill of his colleagues, one by one. I hope that it will be possible for his priceless contribution to congressional history to be made available to Members, to schoolchildren, and to scholars interested in this subject.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will excuse a personal reference. Shortly before the adjournment of the House last night, CLYDE DOYLE came to me and said he would like to have five extensions in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and asked if I would get the floor manager at the time of adjournment to obtain the order. I reached in my pocket and found that I had lost my pencil. He handed me this blue pencil and said, "I think the majority leader should be equipped with a pencil with the compliments of the gentleman from the 23d District of California." I thanked him and he said, "Here also is a red pencil which I use to indicate mistakes." This was my last conversation with CLYDE DOYLE. He may have made mistakes, but I would venture that his mistakes were as few as those of any among us. His attention to duty and detail, his respect for this House and for his colleagues, his character, his mind, his heart, combined to make his contribution a monument of public service. I was shocked beyond words to learn this morning of his passing. I have been told that he died in the calm serenity of sleep. What better evidence of a pure heart, of a noble character, or of a life fully and rightly lived do we need? He died composed and unafraid.

I extend my deepest sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and his family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, my heart is very heavy today.

I have lost a good friend; the Congress has lost a very distinguished Member; and the Nation has lost a man who dedicated his life to the betterment of mankind.

Just yesterday, on the floor of this House, as we were debating issues that are vital to the security of our Nation, Mr. DOYLE discussed with many of us some of the items that were in controversy. He wanted the Nation to have everything that was necessary for our defense.

On Monday, he spoke in behalf of the extension of the draft law. At that time he expressed concern about the number of young men who are physically disqualified from serving in the Armed Forces.

It seems somehow fitting that among Mr. DOYLE's last official words on the floor of this House are words that demonstrated his sincere interest in the welfare of the young men of this Nation.

And now he has crossed to the other side of the river. The uncertainty of life was never more evident than in the sad news I received this morning concerning the loss of this fine man.

Mr. DOYLE was a gentleman in every sense of the word, but more than that he was a Christian gentleman who was dedicated heart and soul to America.

He knew the cost of freedom, for he lost his only son in World War II. And his entire life was devoted to improving the lives of his fellow man and the American way of life.

He was a sincere man with a heart that overflowed with goodness; and a man who found time to be concerned for the oppressed and the downtrodden.

He was a man with a conscience and an unparalleled sense of integrity.

Mr. DOYLE had been a member of the Armed Services Committee since the 81st Congress. During this period of time he successfully fulfilled all of the important duties that were assigned to him.

Every member of our Armed Forces has lost a champion.

On each of his letters, Mr. DOYLE always put these words:

Our beloved Nation deserves the best of whatever we are.

Mr. DOYLE was an example of the best that the Nation has to offer.

I extend my sincerest sympathy to his family.

I hope they will be comforted in the knowledge that his contributions to the Nation and to mankind will stand as a perpetual memorial to his accomplishments throughout the years that were allotted to him.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to our distinguished Speaker.

Mr. McCORMACK. My dear friend, CLYDE DOYLE, was here yesterday; he is not with us today. It is most significant that yesterday a bill was acted upon and passed by this body that came out of the great Committee on Armed Services, of which he was a member for so many years. It can truly be said that CLYDE died in the line of duty.

CLYDE DOYLE's memory will always live in the minds of those of us who knew him, whether in or out of Congress. No more dedicated Member ever served in the Congress of the United States than he. A great American, an outstanding legislator, a fine gentleman, CLYDE DOYLE was not only great but he was good. Possessed of an understanding mind, he symbolized everything that was noble, true, and fine in the life of humankind. How many times has he spoken to you and me who are here? And how often will we remember that fine sweet philosophical outlook of life that he had.

To me the most beautiful thing in the journey of life is to meet men and women with beautiful, good and understanding minds. CLYDE DOYLE possessed such a mind, an example that each and every one of us could follow.

He was a man who realized the dangers that confront our country in the world today, in this trying period of history. CLYDE DOYLE always stood for strength on the part of our Government. He recognized the evil mind and the intent of the Communists. He fought them with vigor. He recognized that the only force the Communists respect is what they fear—military strength and power on our part greater than the Soviet Union possesses. He recognized that the only level upon which negotiations could be had with the Soviet Union was on the level of the law of self-preservation; and every action, every thought, every voice on his part, every vote on his part concerning the national interest of our country and the improving of our position in the world was on the side of strength. How often has CLYDE DOYLE said to me:

If I am going to err in judgment, I prefer to err on the side of strength, not weakness.

So while he is not with us today, the memory of CLYDE DOYLE will always linger in the minds of those who served with him.

To Mrs. Doyle and his daughter I extend my profound sympathy in their great loss and sorrow.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, this morning as I went to office the Capitol flag was at half-mast. A couple of words came to my mind: "Oh, no." I recognized that the half-masted flag indicated that another of our colleagues had passed to his reward.

I immediately called and learned it was my good, warm friend, CLYDE DOYLE.

This has left me, as it has many of his colleague in the House, with a heavy heart. I have had the privilege to serve with CLYDE DOYLE for many years. I got to know him well, not only as a man but as a legislator.

CLYDE DOYLE served as a member of the Committee on Armed Services, on which I have been privileged to serve. He was a truly diligent member, and always actively participated in the committee work. He was respected by his committee colleagues for his objective approach to all defense questions.

CLYDE DOYLE was a man outstanding in many respects—honorable, fair, just, and dependable—and, as has been said by the majority leader, he was a good man. That means so much when we really try to analyze what the word "good" means.

He was a great American, dedicated not only to his country but likewise to this House of Representatives which he loved. And the House of Representatives has had great affection for him. I looked upon him as a friend, and I am proud to have been CLYDE DOYLE's friend.

He leaves us at a time when men of his stature are needed in the Congress of the United States. He will be sorely missed, not only by those on the majority side but likewise by his many friends on this side of the aisle.

Only yesterday I had opportunity to visit with CLYDE. I find it difficult to bring myself to the realization that he has now left us. I will miss him as you will.

I extend to his family my deepest sympathy, and in so doing I know I speak for each and every Member on this side of the aisle.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. SHELLEY].

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I first met CLYDE DOYLE in 1936, and from that personal meeting there grew a friendship which was warm and true. CLYDE DOYLE was all that everyone has said about him. He had fine qualities. He was a man with an understanding attitude; he was a man of forgiveness.

CLYDE served as a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities in this House, and I can recall several times when CLYDE was attacked rather bitterly by those who opposed the committee and anyone connected with that committee.

At one particular time in southern California some years ago, I spoke to CLYDE about this. He smiled and said, "JACK, they just do not understand. They are misguided."

I have never heard CLYDE DOYLE say an unkind word about those who attacked or disagreed with him. He was understanding, he was kind, he had real convictions. He was dedicated to his principles, to his family, and to his country.

It was my pleasure to consider CLYDE DOYLE as a friend.

All I can say now is, Let his example of life be a guide to all of us, and may his passing be a passage into the eternal life and perpetual peace.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, we were shocked and dismayed with the loss of a distinguished public servant, a Member of this House, and for 12 years a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities—CLYDE DOYLE.

He was accustomed to close his letters with a most significant statement:

Our beloved Nation deserves the best of whatever we are.

This was his philosophy and creed of living. I know no one of whom it could be more truthfully said that he gave his best to the service of his country.

In the many hearings of the Committee on Un-American Activities in which I have participated with him, I have observed that he performed an incredible amount of work in preparation for the particular task ahead, that he was conscientious in the performance of his duties, and that he was kind and considerate. He never lost an opportunity to speak well of his native State, of which he has justly proud. As an able and effective legislator, and a colleague whose warmth of personality inspired all of those associated with him, he deserved and now receives, the plaudits of us all. He was truly a great and good man.

His life throughout has been an inspiration, and I am sure that to his wife and family his memory will ever remain as a benediction, and to them I extend my deepest sympathy.

Mr. JOHANSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. JOHANSEN. Mr. Speaker, in the issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which arrived in our offices this morning, there appeared an extension of remarks entered in the RECORD on yesterday.

In the mysterious ways of Providence, what was yesterday a routine incident today becomes a symbol and a remembrance of a distinguished and respected colleague, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE.

In this particular insertion in the RECORD, our colleague from California included two resolutions supporting the work of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, of which CLYDE had been a member for 12 years.

It was typical of Congressman DOYLE's devotion to his Representative responsibilities and to the genuinely bipartisan character of his service on this committee that one of these resolutions had been adopted by the Downey Republican Women, Federated, and the other by Local Union 2058, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO—both voicing full support of the work of the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

As with his membership on the House Committee on Armed Services and all of his duties in this House, Congressman DOYLE served capably, conscientiously, and devotedly.

Through my own association with CLYDE on the House Un-American Activities Committee for more than 4 years, I know that he regarded this particular assignment as a stern, necessary and oft times distasteful duty. I suspect that by temperament it was extremely difficult for this friendly and kindly gentleman to accept the fact that there are men and women, nominally fellow citizens, dedicated to enmity to the United States and the American way of life, but Congressman DOYLE accepted his responsibility without flinching, and I recall more than one occasion in which he severely and yet gently chided hostile and recalcitrant witnesses for accepting the benefits of citizenship and even invoking the protections of the Constitution while joining in the conspiracy seeking the violent overthrow of our Government.

I have been privileged to work particularly closely with Congressman DOYLE as ranking minority member of the committee during the past few weeks when he was serving as its acting chairman. In this relationship he was always the soul of considerateness and courtesy. I am profoundly shocked and deeply grieved that he has so suddenly left us. I extend my heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the other members of his family and to his colleagues in the California delegation.

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the Nation and this House have suffered another irreparable loss in the passing last night in his sleep of CLYDE DOYLE, our distinguished colleague from California. It was my privilege to serve with him since his assignment to the Committee on Armed Services and to break bread with him often.

In the intimacy of these associations I came to value deeply his friendship and endeavored to extend unhesitatingly my friendship to him.

Mr. Speaker, CLYDE was a brave man. He had successfully fought off the effects of a serious illness recently and he did this without a word of complaint and with a determination which will always be an inspiration to those of us who had the privilege to know him.

Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a man who lived his daily life with a deep faith, ready to face his Maker.

My deepest and sincerest sympathy goes out to his family, to the countless friends who kept him in the Congress over these many years, and to the Members of his distinguished congressional delegation.

CLYDE was a man who, as the gentleman has just said, placed the love of his country above his personal health. He was too busy in the pursuit of safeguarding the Nation's interests, that it is no wonder his health at last failed. Like a true soldier, he dedicated his life to his country. Those of us who have served with him will long cherish his memory.

CLYDE DOYLE was too busy with life's problems to realize—as Tennyson says—that:

Such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

My colleagues, CLYDE DOYLE has gone home.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. SISK].

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, it was with profound sorrow and shock that I learned of the sudden death of our colleague and my warm, personal friend, CLYDE DOYLE. He was a valued colleague and an effective and highly esteemed member of the California delegation. I shall miss him not only as a Member of this body, but as a good friend and a devout Christian who inspired others to become better disciples of Christianity.

CLYDE DOYLE was one of the kindest persons I have ever known; I never heard him make an unkind remark about anyone. As a legislator, he was extremely capable and was a hard and productive worker. He was a most conscientious Representative for the 23d District of California and kept in constant touch with his constituents by sending them personal messages. During his years in Congress, he must have sent thousands of these handwritten messages on cards and I know they will be greatly missed by the people of his district.

The Congress and the Nation have lost a truly patriotic and dedicated servant in the death of CLYDE DOYLE. Along with his many other friends, I extend my deepest sympathy to his wife and family. I hope they will take some small consolation from knowing in what high regard we all held him, and that their grief is shared by each and everyone of us.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN].

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I have had the privilege of serving with CLYDE DOYLE since the 79th Congress and I knew him well.

His life here among us was a benchmark of conduct, something for us all to remember when we may be soul searching regarding the ethics that should accompany personalities and actions of Members of this body.

Mr. Speaker, he was kind, his integrity was beyond reproach, he was industrious. He worked for the best interests of all of us.

Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE had real vision.

Mrs. Horan and I join my colleagues here and CLYDE's friends everywhere in extending our deepest sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and their daughter.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOGGS].

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a man of many parts. He was also a man of great human insight. I will explain by telling something that he did a few years ago. A young boy from my area had come here as a page. One day this lad was walking through the tunnel and our colleague met him. Unbeknown to me, he sat down and wrote the mother of this boy one of the most thoughtful letters that I had ever had the privilege of reading.

This was reassuring to this lady. All of us have had some experience, I am sure, with youngsters who come here as page boys, some of them very young.

The mothers are concerned and worried about them. CLYDE had the human instinct of understanding just that sort of thing.

The lady who received that letter was so pleased that when she came to Washington to see her son, the first person she wanted to see was, of course, Congressman CLYDE DOYLE.

He was very active in so many fields of service; I am certain many of them have been mentioned. He worked with the Boy Scouts and other youth organizations. He had time enough to raise money to help crippled children and retarded children and join in the campaigns against diseases such as tuberculosis. He worked on recreational programs. He was active in his professional associations, such as the bar association and related legal activities. In addition to that he served as a member of a draft board. He found time for all kinds of things which meant that he gave of himself to other people.

The distinguished majority leader mentioned the meticulous diary which he kept here day by day. I used to sit by him sometimes and take a look at what he was putting down. All of us know the value of that sort of thing. My wife has called my attention to a series of articles which has been running in the Washington Post, I think, written by the wife of a distinguished former Member of this body who served here over 50 years ago. I have been reading that series because this lady recounts events about Members and their families which are so similar to events which occur today. I hope that this meticulously kept diary which CLYDE DOYLE kept will become a part of the history of this body and the history of our great country.

I know all of us join in extending sympathy to his loved ones. Someone has said that in the knowledge that "to live in hearts we leave behind, is not to die at all." I think that best describes our distinguished former colleague.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY].

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a fine Christian gentleman. I know no one who better exemplified the teachings of the Master; and when you say that you have said all that can be said about any man, you have given to him the highest accolade of praise.

It was my privilege, only a month or two ago, to serve on a committee that nominated CLYDE as vice president of our Thursday morning breakfast prayer group. He served in that group for many years with great distinction. He was a valuable member. This morning it was to attend the meeting of that group that his wife went to arouse him when she found that he had passed on.

May I say that his passing was in keeping with the even tenor of his life. I am certain that he was welcomed with the loud hosannas of the angelic choir as he passed through the portals this morning to that undiscovered land from whose bourne no traveler returns.

I pay my highest respect to him at this time and extend my deepest sympathy to his family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, those of us who have enjoyed any intimate association with CLYDE DOYLE have had our lives enriched by that association. For a number of years I have been privileged to sit next to CLYDE on the Committee on Armed Services. I think I have never known a man so considerate, so understanding and so kind. One of the highlights of my service in this Congress is that I have been privileged to look upon CLYDE as a friend. He was a man of big heart, the kindest person I have ever known. Truly he was one of God's noblemen.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. COHELAN].

Mr. COHELAN. Mr. Speaker, the news of CLYDE DOYLE's death leaves me personally stunned. CLYDE is the second member of the California delegation with whom I have had a close and affectionate association to be taken from us during my time in this great body.

Upon arrival in the Congress in 1959 I was assigned to room 1028 in the New House Office Building, just two doors away from the office of CLYDE DOYLE. Because of our many common problems affecting the welfare of our State, we soon became very close personal friends. Our association was enriched in many other ways, through other activities in which we jointly participated, but particularly on the great House Committee on Armed Services on which we both served.

In the course of our friendship he treated me with the dignity and the respect of a peer and a colleague, but also with the sternness and the gentle affection of a father for his son.

CLYDE was truly a gentleman. He was a gentle and a tender man. He was a man who, having lost a hero son, knew the agony of great personal loss and the heartsickness that accompanies it. In his quiet and effective way he too gave his own life for his country through his devoted service.

CLYDE will be long remembered by all of us who loved him and had the privilege of serving with him. Mrs. Cohelan and I extend our deepest sympathies to his wife, daughter, and grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be appropriate at this point to read two poems which were particular favorites of CLYDE's. The first, "A Congressman's Daily Prayer," was written by CLYDE and his wife Lydia for their 1959 Christmas greeting. The second was written by Lydia Doyle for the 1962 Christmas season:

A CONGRESSMAN'S DAILY PRAYER

(By Congressman Clyde and Lydia Doyle)

As each new day, need of rededication, by me, brings
Give me, dear Lord,
An understanding heart for all mankind,
Clear thinking, to find the essential good,
Purpose, to find true goals, for lasting values,
Honesty, to hold and do what's right in Thy sight.

Humility, to know my weakness and mistakes,
Strength, to meet the increasing daily demands,

Recognition, to see the worth of a colleague's sincere plan.

Cooperation, with all who share this drive,
Confidence, to always press forward when the cause is just.

Independence, if needs be to stand alone, when my conscience says, "I must."

Gratitude, for this great privilege to serve my country and the world.

Spiritual awareness of our Nation's pledge
"In God we trust."

And so, dear Lord,
I thank Thee for the bountiful blessing I and my loved ones have received

These dozen years and more that I have served in Congress.

I pledge, with grateful heart, my loyal service, that Thy will shall come to pass
On earth as it is in heaven

And that Enduring peace shall rule the hearts and deeds of all mankind.

CHRISTMAS 1962

(By Lydia Yeomans Doyle)

It's not the gifts; it's not the bustle;
It's not the excitement; nor is it the rustle
Of tissue, tinsel, and trappings;
It's not the mystery of folks about you.

But it is the belonging, the caring and sharing;
All the glad fellowship that fills the air.
It's the feeling of oneness, the spirit out-reaching

For God is my Father, all men my brothers.
And Christmas means loving.
One day is a symbol;

But love is a blessing that lasts through the years.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I, too, have lost a close personal friend in the passing of CLYDE DOYLE. I wish to associate myself with all the fine remarks that have been made here today in tribute to the memory of Mr. DOYLE, and to say that I know of no individual that I have known over the years I have known Mr. DOYLE who is more deserving of these fine remarks that have been made here in tribute to his memory.

I first met CLYDE some years ago, long before I came to Congress, in connection with some legal matters we had to discuss in California. At that time as a member of the bar I learned of the high respect and esteem the attorneys and the judges and the Bar Association of Los Angeles had for Mr. DOYLE. Then when I came back here we became closer friends.

I certainly agree that there is no more able, honest, and pleasant individual that I have had the pleasure of associating with here than CLYDE DOYLE. He was well respected in California as he was in this body. He was esteemed as a great American because of the wonderful work he has done as a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities.

As my colleagues, the gentlemen from California [Mr. SHELLEY and Mr. SISK], and others have said, I have never heard CLYDE DOYLE make an unfriendly remark against a colleague or anyone else during the time I have known him. We have lost a fine colleague and an able Member of the House of Representatives.

Mrs. Smith joins me in expressing our sincere sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and their daughter.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. STRATTON].

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound regret and sorrow that I rise to join in paying tribute to my late friend and colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, of California, a member of our Committee on Armed Services. It is difficult for me to realize he has left us because only yesterday when we were debating the legislation from our committee, CLYDE was sitting in his accustomed seat alongside the table, and although the position which I took and the position which he took were different, I had occasion to consult with him several times during the day, and his advice and counsel were most helpful and were always given in a kindly and considerate way. In this sense his participation yesterday on his last day of service here was, I think, typical of the service he has always given in this body, a service which was devoted, a service which was informed, a service which was dedicated in its application to the questions before the House, and yet a service which was always rendered with kindly consideration and with a respect for the views and opinions of the other person.

The distinguished majority whip has referred to CLYDE DOYLE's diary. I had occasion yesterday to notice some of the insertions that he was making in it as the debate progressed. I would certainly agree with the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOGGS] that it would be a great addition to the history of this body in the days to come if that diary could be published so that the American people might follow the deliberations of this body as seen through the eyes of the gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE].

I remember an example of the devotion and kindness which have been referred to here so often today, when I first came to this body as a freshman Member. I remember Congressman DOYLE taking several of us aside behind the rail and spending 10 or 15 minutes to describe to us some of the traditions of the House of Representatives and to counsel and to advise us as to how we might become effective legislators. It was a great thrill to me shortly thereafter to be assigned to the Committee on Armed Services where he was already a distinguished member and to be able to work with him on the measures relating to our national security.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JOHANSEN] has already referred to the fact that although Congressman DOYLE was a kindly and friendly person, he was nevertheless a very effective legislator. I recall serving on a subcommittee of which he was chairman. He proved himself to be a very effective, a very precise, and a very determined interrogator of witnesses before our committee, and he came up with a report that solved a complex and highly complicated question. In the same fashion CLYDE DOYLE served his country and this Congress as a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities. Anyone who knew CLYDE DOYLE would know it was possible to hate communism with a deadly hatred, and to be devoted to exposing the Communist philosophy and the Communist conspiracy in every possible way, while at the same time respecting the rights and the freedoms of those individuals who might be appearing before that committee. If there ever was a man who leaned over backward to be kindly and considerate to all that man was CLYDE DOYLE. Certainly, he embodied the combination of a determination to root out both Communist and Fascist philosophies with that fundamental sense of fairness which is so much a part of our American heritage.

Reference has already been made to the fact that he lost a son in the last war and that that fact always was in his heart and in a very real way inspired much of his activity. Certainly we can regard his service to the country in this body and his quiet passing while he was still serving here, as typical of the same kind of dedicated service and the same kind of patriotic sacrifice for one's country that had been represented by his own son.

We who are in this body, could well be proud if our service here could ever in some small way match the dedication and devotion embodied by CLYDE DOYLE. Of him it can well and truly be said: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou now into the glory of thy Lord."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAVIN].

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow that we record the passing of our very good friend and colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, of California.

I counted CLYDE as my very dear friend. He was very conscientious in his work, deeply interested in all things that concerned the welfare of his State and Nation.

His lines of friendship extended to all elements of our social life. He was a man who contributed much to the life of the area in which he lived and the great State of California which he represented.

His service in the Congress won him deep respect and the great admiration and commendation of the Members on both sides of the aisle.

He was a very kindly, friendly man, always glad to see one, and always pleased when any act or deed of his added to the enrichment of our lives.

He had the highest concepts of citizenship; a firm believer in our American way of life with deep faith in the principles and ideals of our Government. It can be said of him that he was an outstanding Member of Congress and a great American.

In all his actions he moved with ease and courtesy and respected in others the qualities he possessed himself—sincerity of conviction and frankness of expression.

So today it is with a feeling of great sorrow that we in the House, who were privileged to serve with him, record his passing.

I shall always remember him for his many acts of kindness that indicated his friendship and good will toward me and all the Members of the House. I considered him one of my best friends.

I extend to his family my deepest and most sincere sympathy.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. GUBSER].

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, a kinder man than CLYDE DOYLE has never lived, nor has one been more deeply respected.

The dictionary defines wisdom as "ability to judge soundly on facts as they relate to life."

CLYDE DOYLE was, then, the very essence of wisdom. His knowledge was great, and it was greater because he related it to life. CLYDE DOYLE loved life and he loved his fellow men. His every action, his total conduct, showed deep affection for humanity.

I was privileged to serve under his chairmanship on the Subcommittee To Investigate Military Discharges. CLYDE DOYLE's principle concern throughout those lengthy and exhaustive hearings was for the young man who was drafted at an early and tender age, committed an indiscretion and would be forced throughout his lifetime to endure the stigma of an undesirable discharge and the economic problems which go with it. CLYDE DOYLE's recommendations represented a wise compromise between the necessarily rigid requirements of military discipline and a delicate understanding of human frailty and dignity.

CLYDE DOYLE was sincerely dedicated to the service of his country. He viewed every issue with an open mind and in an entirely unbiased manner. He was always ready to listen to a colleague and give his advice when it was sought, and his advice invariably proved to be the course of wisdom. To me, CLYDE DOYLE was a perfect symbol of goodness, honesty, and fairness.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, while it would be difficult if not impossible to add anything to the tributes that have been expressed here today, I cannot let this opportunity pass without paying my respects to the man whom I have known for the last 14 years.

When I came to Congress, CLYDE DOYLE and I had a mutual friend, a former Missourian, who at that time was a client of his. It was through this mutual acquaintance that we became friends. This friendship and close association has grown throughout the years.

As has been stated before, we knew CLYDE DOYLE as a Christian gentleman, a man who was not only kind but most considerate. It has been said previously, but it will bear repeating; he is one of the few men I know of that I never heard say an unkind thing of another individual. He was a forgiving man, and as a previous speaker said, his interest in trying to be helpful to those who were in distress has been evidenced on many occasions.

As CLYDE and I discussed the operation of Congress, many times he referred to the notes he made from day to day. I often told him that some day his notes would reflect what had actually happened here in Congress. As he and I discussed this matter, I always contended that our CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is not a true reflection of what actually occurs in the House, with the extensions, the revisions, the expunging, and the various changes that take place. But in those notes that CLYDE DOYLE made I think he reflects what actually happened here. He has recorded the important events, as well as some of the trivialities that have made this body the interesting forum which it has become. I would commend the suggestion of our majority leader, our majority whip and others who have indicated they would like to see a record made, for posterity to enjoy from the remarks that CLYDE DOYLE had recorded in those notes of his.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I say that in the loss of CLYDE DOYLE this House has lost one of its most valuable Members; his district has lost a conscientious, hard working and understanding Representative whose value I think was known to the people there, as indicated by the results of the last election. He told me that in the last election he received the largest majority he had ever received.

Mrs. Jones and I join in expressing our deepest sympathy to Mrs. Doyle, her daughter, and grandchildren, who have lost a kind father and grandfather whose memory will be kindly cherished throughout the years by all who were privileged to know CLYDE DOYLE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHADEBERG].

Mr. SCHADEBERG. Mr. Speaker, the news of the death of CLYDE DOYLE came to me as a shock as I listened to my radio on the way to my office this morning.

While it was not my privilege to have known Mr. DOYLE over the years, our association with each other as members of the Committee on Un-American Activities gave me a profound insight into the character and spirit of this great American who was dedicated to the service of his people and the cause of freedom.

Beneath the calm exterior of genuine and warm humility was a child of God who knew the meaning of love for his fellow man; who had concern for the principles of justice and decency; respect for the dignity and rights of all men; and who possessed an unwavering determination to do what was right as God gave him to see and know that right.

He was kind to his colleagues and associates. He was kind to those he felt impelled by conviction to oppose.

I have been with him in hearings in which he displayed compassion and patience to witnesses that characterized maturity in judgment and character befitting of the true patriot and man of faith. Many times his compassion was returned by vituperation and contempt of the meanest sort. Yet uncouth men could not soil his dignity and stature.

I do not know the denomination of the church to which Mr. DOYLE gave his loyalty and support. I suspect that it was secondary to the fact that he felt impelled to make his testimony as first of all a child of God. Indicative of his sincerity is this incident I relate to you which I am sure he never intended I should speak to others as being unusual or in any way a support of his own faith.

He told me shortly after I arrived in Congress that he tried to be present for the opening of the sessions of the House because he felt the need for the prayers offered by our good Chaplain. Mr. DOYLE was present with regularity. Today's opening of this session was marked by his absence. Yet in a truer sense he was with us and will be with us to inspire each of us to greater dedication and to acceptance of our responsibilities as those entrusted with the sacred task of representing freemen.

It is impossible for me to say any profound words in his behalf. Nothing I could say on this floor today could add to the high esteem in which he was held by those who knew him intimately nor detract from the man who so nobly served among us. He has spoken with his own life in words more beautiful and meaningful than could come from the lips of those who were recipients of his friendship but could not comprehend the depth of character that made him so beloved.

This was his faith, expressed in the words of John Lickey McCreery:

THERE IS NO DEATH

(By John Lickey McCreery)

There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some other shore
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forevermore.

There is no death! The dust we tread
Shall change beneath the summer showers
To golden grain, or mellow fruit,
Or rainbow-tinted flowers.

There is no death! An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bares our best loved ones away,
And then we call them "dead."

Born unto that undying life,
They leave us but to come again;
With joy we welcome them—the same
Except in sin and pain.

And ever near us, though unseen
The dear immortal spirit tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life—there are no dead!

May God richly bless the bereaved members of his family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. BALDWIN].

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, as has been mentioned earlier, CLYDE DOYLE this year, at the beginning of this session of Congress, was elected vice president of the Thursday Morning House Prayer Breakfast Club. The fact that he was unanimously elected to that position by the 40 or 50 House Members who are in regular attendance at that Thursday morning breakfast meeting is an indication of the great trust that those Members placed in CLYDE DOYLE. He was a man of deep religious and moral convictions and a man of deep compassion. The people throughout the country look to the Members of Congress to provide leadership, to provide guidance for their youngsters to follow. In CLYDE DOYLE they had a person who met that test from every standpoint, and I am sure the high school and grammar school youngsters in his district who had occasion to meet CLYDE DOYLE or to know of his background and of his moral convictions could certainly pick him as a model and their parents would be proud of that decision. Those of us who came to Congress from California, as members of the California delegation, found that CLYDE DOYLE was one to whom we would automatically look for guidance. He was a man who gave equal guidance to people on this side of the aisle as well as on that side of the aisle, because to him there was no aisle.

There was in his view just what was right and what was wrong. He fought for what was right according to the high standards that he set for himself. Yet at the same time, despite those high standards, he did not look down on any man or any woman. He shared their problems with them and tried to work with them in solving these problems.

Mr. Speaker, my wife joins with me in extending our deepest sympathy to his widow and his family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, we were all saddened with the passing of our colleague, CLYDE DOYLE.

It was not my privilege to serve with our distinguished Member on any committee. But shortly after I came to Congress I learned to know CLYDE DOYLE. He was typical of those from the West who have an open hand, a smiling and understanding manner. He was a humble man and he expressed himself for the benefit of all mankind.

Throughout his lifetime he had the privilege of visiting and living in my area. We discussed those times, we reminisced of the West and what contributions he had made. We understand and know that he was sympathetic to those ex-servicemen whom he felt had gotten a bad break in their lifetime.

CLYDE DOYLE knew many of my good friends in the congressional district which it is my privilege to represent. Each time that we adjourned and Congress reconvened CLYDE DOYLE always asked about his friends. He wanted to know how they were doing. That was the spirit of CLYDE DOYLE.

Mr. Speaker, we shall miss him in the coming years as he has contributed so much to this Nation, its patriotism and its well-being as a good American citizen.

Mr. Speaker, I extend my sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CHENOWETH].

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I was greatly shocked and saddened this morning when I learned of the passing of our beloved colleague, CLYDE DOYLE. I had visited with him just a couple of days ago and he appeared to be in excellent health. I want to join in paying tribute to his memory. I also wish to extend my sympathy to our colleagues from California in this great loss which they have sustained.

Mr. Speaker, California has not alone sustained this loss, but the entire nation has suffered an irreparable loss. All of us are going to greatly miss CLYDE and his cordial greetings.

Mr. Speaker, I have never known a more conscientious Member of this House or a harder worker than CLYDE DOYLE. He was anxious to serve his country to the utmost of his ability. I know it was a matter of great personal concern to him as to whether or not he was fully and adequately discharging his duties and responsibilities as a Member of this House.

We had mutual friends in Colorado, and we used to talk about them frequently. In fact, I seldom met CLYDE without stopping for a visit.

I recall the strenuous efforts he made to get a bill passed which would assist those who had received military discharges which were other than honorable. CLYDE felt that an injustice was being done in many of these cases, and that we owed these boys the obligation of trying to correct these discharges. I discussed this legislation with him many times and this was a matter close to his heart.

Mr. Speaker, I called upon CLYDE for a personal favor not so long ago. He went out of his way to help me in a matter which meant nothing whatever to him or to his district. CLYDE was a true Christian, and was always happy to extend a helping hand to others.

Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a faithful public servant and served his people well. It was a great privilege to have him as a friend and to work with him over the years. Mrs. Chenoweth joins with me in extending our sincere sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the other members of the family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. McFALL].

Mr. McFALL. Mr. Speaker, all of us have lost a fine friend in CLYDE DOYLE. Our country and the people of his district have lost an extraordinary Representative. Missing from the seat he always occupied will be one of the finest examples of what a Member should be and should do. He leaves a standard of ability, honesty, kindness, and gentleness for all of us to live by. As he certainly would have wished, he was with us, working for his beloved country until the very end, an end that came as gently and as easily and with the same dignity that he had lived his life. His customary chair is empty but we know he now occupies another chair of honor alongside his Maker.

My wife joins me and all of his many friends in extending to his wonderful wife and family our deepest sympathy.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, my life has been enriched by my friendship with CLYDE DOYLE. When over the radio this morning I heard of his passing I was shocked and grieved.

I have listened to the tributes paid CLYDE DOYLE in this Chamber today and in every utterance has been a marked sincerity and the reflection of deep personal grief. To us all CLYDE DOYLE stood for the personification of the spirit of self-abnegation. We all sensed that he was never thinking of himself, but always of his mission on earth as he saw it and of his service to his God, his country, and his fellow man.

I do not think that CLYDE DOYLE ever thought a harsh or evil thing of another human being. Always he practiced charity and understanding. A year or two ago the committee on which he served, the Committee on Un-American Activities, had commissioned him to revise its rules. CLYDE DOYLE came to me several times as he did to others of his colleagues, saying, "Please go over this draft; if you can make any further suggestion to insure absolute fairness please give me that suggestion." I know how earnestly and conscientiously he worked on that task.

Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in expression of deepest sympathy to his fine wife and to his daughter—and we all remember the great grief that was his and theirs when he lost his only son in World War II—and I wish also to join in expressing the faith that the soul of CLYDE DOYLE is now reunited with the Master whom he served with obedience, in thought and in deed, every day, every hour of his sojourn on earth. I can say no more. I am bowed with the grief that possesses me. This House has lost one of the noblest characters that ever served within its historic walls.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PIRNIE].

Mr. PIRNIE. Mr. Speaker, the tributes to which we have listened today have certainly come from the heart. The sudden death of our distinguished colleague from California is most assuredly a distinct loss to this House and the Nation.

As a fellow members of the Committee on Armed Services it has been my privilege to work with this fine man on a day-to-day basis and to observe at first hand his true character and ability.

CLYDE DOYLE served his district with complete dedication, bringing to his work a deep sense of personal concern. We affectionately recall his gentle manner, always expressive of a sincere consideration of others. His faithful attendance record is well known and attests his complete devotion to his task. Few Members have felt more keenly the responsibility which is ours in the Congress. He was proud of the trust placed in him by his people and he never betrayed that trust.

These fine qualities of mind and heart assure that this modest, kindly, and able public servant will be long and affectionately remembered. We extend to his fine family our heartfelt sympathy.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. OLSEN].

Mr. OLSEN of Montana. Mr. Speaker, the House is indeed in sorrow today. We have suffered a great loss. CLYDE DOYLE genuinely loved his fellow man. I think that every man has experienced, the same as I, CLYDE DOYLE's extending a favor without even being asked. He loved so well that he wanted me to share his friends, so he would write those whom he knew in Montana and he wrote me copies to inform me of his writing them so that I would become acquainted with and share his dear friends who live in my State.

He not only would not hurt anyone, but no one ever heard him say an unkind thing of anyone. CLYDE DOYLE had a kind and generous word about everyone of whom he spoke. There was once an occasion when I said in his presence an unkind word about another man whom he knew. He did not rebuke me but he corrected me. He gave me an example of how to get along better, and I think he gave all the Members that kind of example. He would go the extra mile for everyone. He gave of himself always.

I liken him to Peter the Apostle. "Silver and gold have I none, but I give what I have. I give myself." CLYDE DOYLE did better than that, because what little silver and gold he had he shared that, too. He was so very Christian. He pleasantly forgave. He exhibited his forgiveness from a generous heart, a happy heart, and it was exhibited by his glowing, friendly countenance. CLYDE is one of God's own, and he has gone home.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. YOUNGER].

Mr. YOUNGER. Mr. Speaker, we have all lost a true friend in the passing of CLYDE DOYLE. I was perhaps one of the last of our colleagues to visit with CLYDE. We sat together at the same table with Mrs. Doyle last night at the American Legion banquet. He told us of his plans to celebrate his 50th wedding anniversary next year and of his future plans for the House prayer breakfast.

I left the table about 10 o'clock. There was no indication whatsoever of the possibility of his being called to leave on an earlier schedule. I left the table with the remark, "I'll see you at breakfast in the morning," and his cheery reply was, "I'll be there."

CLYDE DOYLE as a man, a husband, a father, and a colleague was a dedicated Christian gentleman in every sense of the word. Mrs. Younger joins me in expressing our deep sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and their family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLYNT].

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Speaker, I join the gentleman from California in this tribute to the memory of a beloved friend, and an outstanding Member of this body, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE, late a Representative from the State of California. With a feeling of profound sorrow and sadness this morning we heard the news of his untimely passing. CLYDE DOYLE was, indeed, an outstanding Member of this body. He was also a great American. He ably represented his State and district for nine terms.

It is particularly significant that our colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, was present on the floor of the House on yesterday during the proceedings in this body. His attendance record was one of which any Member would well be proud. He was present and cast his vote on the last rollcall taken in this body during his lifetime.

Mr. Speaker, it is equally significant that his plans for today would have included attendance at the regular Thursday morning prayer breakfast participated in by Members of the House of Representatives.

CLYDE DOYLE was by some standards what might have been termed a quiet man. Notwithstanding his quietness and serenity, he possessed a truly dynamic personality.

CLYDE DOYLE was an able Representative. He was a truly great and patriotic American. He was a real man in the finest sense of that word. He was also a Christian gentleman. His life was an inspiration to all who were privileged to come in contact with him, to know him, and to be associated with him, and to love him.

This body in which he served, his Nation and the State that he represented are better because of his participation and the contributions he made during a long and useful life.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Flynt and our family join in extending our heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and other members of his family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. UTT].

Mr. UTT. Mr. Speaker, once again one of our friends and colleagues has crossed the river that marks the boundary of that unknown shore. CLYDE DOYLE and I were very closely associated for more than 20 years before either one of us came to the Congress of the United States. He like myself was a native son of California. We shared many experiences and pleasures together. He truly was one of God's noblemen. He was sincere, he was honest, he was dedicated. I know that he will be happy in the reward to which he has gone. We had a very close relationship in the Congress and although we may have differed from time to time, there never was a time that that disagreement was not a reasonable disagreement and one which always had a happy ending.

Mrs. Utt joins me in extending to his wife and family our deepest sympathy.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LIBONATI].

Mr. LIBONATI. Mr. Speaker, the death of CLYDE DOYLE closed the career of a person who in his simplicity of understanding contributed much to the appreciation of those dedicated practices which many men feel through Americanism, a basic understanding of the common American in his acceptance of his patriotic devotion to his country.

CLYDE DOYLE was not an exhibitionist. We all know that he served on a committee that probably covers the most delicate area within which a legislative body can operate. Never has he personally been criticized for any practice on that committee; and it was a most difficult committee on which to serve. His service on that and other committees has contributed much to the acceptance of the procedures of the House of Representatives.

CLYDE DOYLE as a lawyer never placed his legal and professional abilities beyond the scope of human liberty. CLYDE DOYLE was a patriot because of the fact that he understood the force of Americanism that has contributed to the welfare of his fellow men. His service on the Subversives Committee, of which he was a member for so many years, indicated to him the purposes of the committee within the limitation of the legislative exactments of this body.

CLYDE DOYLE in his private life, in his civic life, stood up for and expounded the religious principles in which he believed and was active in his church, and was active at all times in combating and exposing the teachings of communism.

Few men in their lifetime have accumulated the thanks, the honor, and the respect that CLYDE DOYLE has in his native State of California. His civic activities brought him in contact with the most unfortunate, also with the youth and with the underprivileged. He actively participated in programs looking to the betterment and amelioration of the lot of unfortunate human beings. No greater service can a man give than to direct the destinies of the young, to bring to them an understanding of life's problems so they may be able to cope with the exigencies and necessities of life as it unfolds before them and lead them to an honorable manhood and womanhood. That is the service that CLYDE DOYLE gave to his fellow Americans in their youth in his community. He gracefully accepted the civic responsibilities that fall upon the man in public life, and the way he carried out those principles and responsibilities marks him as a man of possessive mind.

I am proud to have been associated with him, especially in the breakfast group. It was there we could appreciate his breadth of mind and his philosophy as reflected in his interpretation of Biblical quotations which stamp him as a man whom all Christians can respect. We know that he himself derived benefits from his reflection and study that made him a happy man in life.

To his lovely wife Lydia, to his daughter Dorothy, and to his grandsons, Dan-Doyle Stanton and Clyde Douglas, we extend our heartfelt sympathy. And I dedicate to his memory this poem:

The winds of fate have blown away
A kindly soul whose words did sway
In Halls of Congress e'en today
Those who treasure the American way.

To his family and friends in life I say that every member of the Illinois delegation extends his condolence on this sad day.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HOSMER].

Mr. HOSMER. Mr. Speaker, my life also has been enriched by the friendship of CLYDE DOYLE. Ours was a true friendship which, unlike that of many of you, began in adversity in 1950, when CLYDE DOYLE and I contested each other as the candidates of our respective parties for election to Congress from California's then 18th district. It was a spirited campaign, a campaign which brought us together on the same platform in personal combat, so to speak, on numerous occasions. On each of those occasions I found that I came off best, not because I won the arguments, far from that, but because CLYDE DOYLE gave me a little of himself on each occasion and taught me a little more of the way of true Americanism, true patriotism, devotion, and dedication, both to humanity and to our country.

At the end of that contest the score was close, a difference of some 1,850 votes out of 200,000. I stayed in California. CLYDE came back to Washington again.

Two years later, following the 1950 reapportionment, the old 18th Congressional District of California became two new districts, one the 18th and the other the district which CLYDE always and fondly referred to as "California's Great 23d District."

When I came to Congress in 1953, CLYDE welcomed me as a brother and as a friend. He was as kind, helpful, and considerate as anyone could possibly be to a freshman Member of this Congress. But that kind of feeling toward one of his fellows, his helpfulness and consideration did not cease after a few months. It continued with me just as it has with each of our colleagues down through the years. I know that each and every one of us, and the thousands of people from every walk of life who knew, loved, and respected him, feels not only his own keen personal sense of loss and deprivation by CLYDE's quiet passing, but also seeks to share the burden of greater loss that inescapably must bear so heavily upon his lovely widow, Lydia, and the surviving members of his family.

All of us today, I believe, can give thanks that we have been privileged to have been associated with CLYDE DOYLE, a man who loved and revered Abraham Lincoln and who strived in every way, during every day to emulate the fine qualities of that great American President.

My family joins me in this expression of our deep sense of loss, and our most reverent condolences to Mrs. Doyle and CLYDE's family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MATTHEWS].

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleagues in expressing sadness because of the passing of our beloved friend, CLYDE DOYLE.

References have already been made to his activities in connection with our weekly prayer meeting. I remember so well a talk he made to us some months ago in our prayer meeting. The challenge of that talk was a personal challenge to himself to live according to the tenets of Christianity. He in his successful efforts to lead a life of personal piety reminded me so much of another departed Christian colleague, the Honorable Percy Priest, of Tennessee.

I can say, Mr. Speaker, that CLYDE DOYLE, and men like Percy Priest, have inspired me since I have been in the Congress to endeavor to lead a life in accordance with high religious principles. I know of no man in the Congress who strived more successfully for personal piety than did CLYDE DOYLE. There was no sophistry in his makeup; there was no arrogance in his demeanor; there was no hatred in his heart. He was gentle; he was kind. The poet has said the evil that men do lives after them and that the good is often interred with their bones. I believe there was no evil in this man CLYDE DOYLE, and I believe we shall remember him only because of his noble personality. Each year in the House we have a debate on the activities of our committees. We hear comments, frequently critical, for example, of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. And, I remember time and time again I have said, in conversations with people, that if the citizens of America knew CLYDE DOYLE, who serves on the House Committee on Un-American Activities, I do not see how they could fail to have the high confidence in that committee that I personally do. He was fair; he was honorable in every decision that he made. I think in our democracy that it is not enough for men to be free and to be educated, but they must be good men, and of all of my colleagues in the Congress, I know of no one who was better than CLYDE DOYLE. He was a good man.

We, in Florida, Mr. Speaker, extend to the great State of California our profound sympathy because of your loss, and we pray that the blessings of divine providence be with the loved ones of our departed friend.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, there is very little that I can add to what has already been said so sincerely and effectively about my good friend, CLYDE DOYLE. However, at the expense of being repetitious I would like to make a few comments about him.

Besides being an outstanding legislator, CLYDE DOYLE was a very friendly and understanding human being. Coming from my home State of California, CLYDE's sincere affection for all Members extended across party lines. When I first arrived here in Washington in my freshman term, to meet the problems of a new life, CLYDE DOYLE was one of the first of my colleagues to put out a friendly hand. He was always ready and willing to answer my or any other new Member's questions and to make suggestions that would be helpful. He continued this very kind and sincere approach not only to all the Members, but to the many problems that confront the House. CLYDE always seemed to prefer the friendly, nonpartisan method of solving our problems.

My wife's and my heart go out to CLYDE DOYLE's family in their bereavement.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. REIFEL].

Mr. REIFEL. Mr. Speaker, I shall attempt to make the balance of my life better because CLYDE DOYLE lived.

It was reassuring to me, when I came here 2 years ago—my first term in this great and august body—to find this man, whenever I came to the opening of the House, here in his accustomed place. Then, at our Thursday morning prayer breakfast group it was further reassuring when on one occasion as our speaker, to have a witness for Christ stand before us, and, as that witness bare his heart and with tears streaming down his cheeks, to remind us that his trust was in God. I thought as I listened to him that if each of us, the 435 Members of this House, would be here when our Chaplain opened this great body's deliberations with prayer, what a great force it would be in the free world. Since his admonition to us of the Thursday morning prayer breakfast group that he needed to be here in the Chamber to get his strength for the day by the inspiration that comes from the words of the Chaplain, I have tried as diligently as possible to likewise be here on the opening of our sessions.

Mr. Speaker, he was a man who made one feel greater than he. This was a real heartening and reassuring attribute for another to greet one in this manner, especially as one who is in his first term in the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, only last Thursday morning we were sitting by each other. I was given the privilege to give the talk at the prayer breakfast. In my presentation I related a saying among the Indian-Americans that went something like this:

Great Spirit, grant that I may not criticize my neighbor until I have walked a mile in his moccasins.

Mr. Speaker, I think that statement could have been authored by our departed colleague, CLYDE DOYLE. Only yesterday he said, "I will see you tomorrow at the prayer breakfast." As I was dressing this morning, one of the things to which I looked forward was to be with him. Then while listening to the radio and TV it was announced that he had gone to join his fathers.

Mr. Speaker, last Thursday morning as he was with the rest of us paying for our breakfast, he pulled out some bright, shiny Lincoln head pennies. He said, "Ben, these are brandnew pennies that I got upstairs." He said, "Whenever a young man or a young woman writes to me, I put one of these brandnew pennies in the letter of reply and tell him or her that this comes from the greatest nation in the world, a God-fearing nation," and that he made other appropriate remarks with respect to the man whose image is imprinted on the penny.

Mr. Speaker, I extend my deepest sympathy to the Members of the California delegation and to the family of this great person by whom I was privileged to be called a friend.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL].

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, after all of these beautiful tributes to our departed colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, one could very easily succumb to the admonition of Lord Lister, who said:

When the lark sings on high, lesser birds cease their twittering lest they miss one miracle note.

But that does not satisfy those whose hearts are overflowing with the memory of CLYDE DOYLE, a man who always tempered justice with mercy and who only last week in walking from the Committee on Armed Services on which we both serve, put his hand on my arm and said "My estimation of you is that you are a gentleman."

I think perhaps I shall try to spend the rest of my years living up to this stimulus by a busy man; one who served his people, his family, his Congress and his fellow man on two committees and, as has been so well said here in our weekly prayer breakfast group.

I also was privileged to serve last year by appointment of the chairman of our Committee on Armed Services with CLYDE on a special committee for the National Security Agency. I found him delving but understanding and always, as our Speaker has said, kindly. He was persistent and loyal; certainly a worthy adversary but a great teacher and a personable friend and counselor.

He died in the traces, truly just as much in the service of his country as did his departed son during World War II. He died with his boots on and as I used to be wont to advise some patients, "twere better to do than to lie down and wait."

Only last week he rendered yeoman service, in the absence of TAD WALTER on the House Committee on Un-American Activities authorization and appropriation. Certainly he did the same yesterday on the procurement bill out of Committee on Armed Services.

As a doctor who has of necessity had more than his share, perhaps, of close brushes with death in the service, in the operating room and in the hospitals of our Nation, I am glad and thankful unto our Master that he passed away peacefully in his sleep. This is probably a just reward on earth for a man who has given so much and who grew out of convictions of his own soul. No man stands so tall as he who stoops to lift up a boy.

I know that our good Lord above will receive him and rest his soul forever in his embraceable bosom.

Mrs. Hall and I extend our sympathy to Mrs. Doyle, their daughter, the grandchildren and the bereaved.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEERMANN].

Mr. BEERMANN. Mr. Speaker, when I heard on the television this morning that Congressman CLYDE DOYLE had left our midst several incidents flashed through my mind. I was not so fortunate as to have worked as closely as other Members with our departed colleague and so benefit from his wise experience. But I can pay personal tribute to his gentlemanly conduct and inborn sense of courtesy and graciousness. I entered the House of Representatives 2 years ago and was given the honor of delivering the George Washington Farewell Address on the anniversary of his birth. I confess that I approached my assignment with some trepidation. However, later that same day CLYDE DOYLE was gracious enough to telephone me and was very complimentary on my recitation. Perhaps this courtesy was only a minor act, Mr. Speaker, but I want to state that it endeared Mr. DOYLE forever to me. It convinced me that he was one of the most sincere, genteel, and considerate men privileged to enter this great House of Representatives.

Mrs. Beermann and I extend our sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the other members of the family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not speak at length but I did want to make reference to an incident that happened a couple of days ago in this Chamber. I was not on the floor yesterday regularly and I did not see the late CLYDE DOYLE during the proceedings. But the day before when I entered the House he motioned me to his side as I came into the Chamber and he said, "George, I want you to be more regular in attendance at these Thursday morning prayer meetings at the Capitol." I pointed out that I had been at the national prayer breakfast at the Mayflower Hotel earlier in the year and that I had periodically attended the prayer breakfast on Thursday mornings at the Capitol. He said that that was all well and good but that he wanted me to be more regular in attendance. I promised to do so, and I shall keep my promise.

I point this little incident out because it gives an insight into the character and personality of our departed friend. The incident which I have described was typical of this wonderful man. I want to join in tribute to the memory of a man of such stature as CLYDE DOYLE.

Of course, through the years I had seen CLYDE DOYLE at his post of duty in the House of Representatives. We had many common interests in the field of national defense and we discussed these problems from time to time.

I shall not proceed further. I know many of the friends of the late CLYDE DOYLE will read this issue of the RECORD with a great deal of interest. It has been a privilege to join in tributes to the memory of this good man and to extend sympathy to his family left behind.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I too am deeply grieved by the loss of our distinguished friend and colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, suddenly over the night. It has been my privilege and high honor to have served here in the House with CLYDE for almost 17 years. This is the beginning of our 17th year together.

I want to associate myself with the other Members in the high and appropriate tribute that has been paid to our friend today. Each of us could go on and out of our own experience relate many, many incidences such as have been related here today.

We did not have to write me a note or give me reference about a friend of mine that he saw in California, in his own district, or give me the names of the individuals and suggest that I write them, that they wanted to hear from me. There are so many of those details and little things in life which in my judgment really make up the living of an individual as a human being.

So we might emulate the life and character of CLYDE DOYLE. I shall miss him as I know other Members of this House miss him because of what he was and what he has meant to us.

Mrs. Harris and I join others in extending our deepest sympathies to Mrs. Doyle and the family in their bereavement.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. CORMAN].

Mr. CORMAN. Mr. Speaker, the passing of CLYDE DOYLE brings sorrow to each of us. He so aptly admonished us that our beloved Nation deserves the best of whatever we are and he inspired us by giving his best. It always seemed to me that he had another principle, that the men around him deserved kindness and love, and of these qualities he gave. I believe that, more than any man with whom I have worked, he followed the 11th commandment of our Lord.

My wife and I join in the expression of deepest sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHILBIN].

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I am greatly shocked and deeply saddened by the untimely passing of my dear friend and beloved colleague, Congressman CLYDE DOYLE. His loss is truly an irreplaceable one.

Only yesterday, I talked with him, and he seemed to be in vigorous health. It is almost impossible to realize that he is gone.

CLYDE DOYLE was one of the outstanding Members of the House of Representatives and of our Great Committee on Armed Services. I had the honor and distinction to serve with him for years. He was a member of Subcommittee No. 2 of the Committee on Armed Services. There was never a more diligent, more capable or more dedicated or conscientious man on our committee, nor was there ever a man who demonstrated such high qualities of personality and character in the House of Representatives.

A brilliant lawyer and an indefatigable worker, a trusted friend and counselor, CLYDE DOYLE distinguished himself greatly in this body and in our committee.

He was a man of great and unusual humility and exalted character. He was endowed with a lofty sense of honor and a conscientiousness in his work, together with an almost incredible industry and painstaking application to duty.

He served with a zeal and high purpose and a spirit of nobility that certainly has never been excelled in the history of this Congress. He was a man of forthright principles, humane, forward-looking, and just. His strong sense of justice and his great mind and heart prompted him always to strive with compassion and with extraordinary zeal to serve the ordinary people of his great district and of his State and our Nation. CLYDE DOYLE was devoted to human beings and to the cause of humanity and to the lofty purposes of government. He was resolute and unswerving in his patriotism and in his self-sacrificing willingness to labor, even at great cost to his own health and well-being, for the security and defense of our country, and for the broader, humane, social and economic policies and programs and the advancement of the cause of the people which were always so dear to his heart, and which were such a real part of his very being.

Mr. Speaker, I realize full well that mere words are quite inadequate to portray the depth of my personal sorrow at the passing of this fine public servant and dear friend, or to portray the very high quality of his unselfish service to our country and its people.

He will be sorely missed in our committee where he made such outstanding and memorable contributions.

His name will long be remembered in the Halls of this great legislative body where he so faithfully and so constructively served for such a long period of time with such outstanding distinction.

Mr. Speaker, to know CLYDE DOYLE was to respect, admire, and love him. The sincerity and nobility of his friendship and deep spiritual fellowship will ever be treasured by those of us who were fortunate enough to know him and work with him.

It is, indeed, with a very heavy heart that I join his dear, devoted wife, beloved family and his friends and constituents and colleagues in mourning his sorrowful demise.

To his cherished wife and family, I tender my most heartfelt sympathy in the great sorrow that has come to them. I hope and pray that this dear, loyal friend, this trusted counselor and illustrious colleague may find peace and rest in his Heavenly home.

We will miss him here in these historic Halls where he contributed so much to our work and to our country. His memory will long remain green and fresh with us as an inspiration. His gentle ways, his warm friendship and his spirit of devotion and dedication to great tasks, will long continue to guide us.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I cannot refrain from saying a word in eulogy about our departed colleague. Not far from where I am now standing, we sat and visited yesterday afternoon with our departed colleague during the debate on the military procurement bill. It was his preference to occupy the same seat in this Chamber, and he usually was found in that seat. This was characteristic of his regularity in everything he did—regular in attendance and regular in his devotion to duty.

At a time such as this when we look back and reflect on the characteristics of a friend who has departed, it is appropriate that we recall that he was both regular and punctual in everything he did, not only in his attendance of this body but also in his committee work. Only this morning I knew he must have been ill or that something was wrong, because we always passed in the hall, just before 10 o'clock, he going to his committee, and I going to mine. When I missed him this morning I felt at that time something was wrong that CLYDE was not on his way to his committee.

CLYDE DOYLE was a man who believed in the proposition that in order to have friends one must be a friend. He was a friend to all of us and of great help to many of us. He had the habit of keeping notes, which few of us do, of the proceedings here on the floor. One could go to him and find out what had transpired in their absence or coming in late could get an accurate account from him of what had been missed. He was on the floor every minute of every session. I recall when we were all sweating out adjournment last year about the first of October he took it upon himself to try to cheer up some of us who felt we should be back home in the campaign; he tried to be helpful by saying: "We will be out of here this week, or at the latest in a few days." I suspect it was an effort to say this to try to keep us cheerful, because I suspect down deep in his heart he knew adjournment might not come as quickly as most of us preferred.

He was a man of great sincerity. Much can be said about him that is good.

He was a successful practicing lawyer and headed his own law firm. He had been elected to local office in his native State of California. He had been active in many civic enterprises including work for the Boy Scouts of America, hospitals for crippled children, the YMCA, and the California Philharmonic Orchestra Association. Not only was he active in the successful practice of law, but he had attained success in the field of banking. He told me of having once been accorded the nomination by the voters of both the Democratic and Republican Parties under the California crossfiling law, and in one election he had no opponent at all during the fall general election. But those were things that most of us did not know about unless there was a direct inquiry, because CLYDE was not one to tell about his successes. He was a modest man, and he was a man who was always very careful to be certain that everything he said was not to even the slightest degree an exaggeration of fact.

Just this one further thought: It is so difficult to express words of consolation to the survivors of the departed. I am sure in this instance they have a great measure of consolation in the esteem in which his colleagues held him and the feeling that every Member who knew

CLYDE DOYLE unanimously respected him.

May his good soul rest in peace.

To Mrs. Doyle and the daughter, my own family joins with me in this expression of our deepest sympathy.

Mr. TEAGUE of California. Mr. Speaker, I join in every tribute made here today to the memory of CLYDE DOYLE. No statement has been exaggerated in any way.

No finer, kinder American Christian gentleman ever lived.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a good, a sweet man. A dedicated public servant his motives were pure, his dedication to duty intense, and his patriotism of the highest. The House and our country have suffered a grievous loss. I extend my deepest sympathy to his bereaved loved ones.

Mr. CLAUSEN. Mr. Speaker, to have one of our number taken from our midst by a Great Unseen Hand is, indeed, a great shock to all of us whether we had known the departed long or little. As a new Congressman from the home State of CLYDE DOYLE, I knew him only from brief acquaintance as a fine Christian gentleman. But I knew him by reputation as a great patriot for his outstanding work on the House Committee on Un-American Activities. His passing is a great loss to our Nation. I join with my colleagues in heartfelt condolences to CLYDE DOYLE's family, and I pray that God will comfort them as only He can.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I join in this tribute to our beloved colleague from California, who served his State and Nation so ably for so many years in this body.

CLYDE DOYLE was a dedicated public servant in the finest tradition of the House. He worked tirelessly in performance of his representative duties for the people of his district. He was conscientious and humble, a friend of all who were privileged to serve with him.

As a member of the Armed Services Committee and the Committee on Un-American Activities, he rendered important service in strengthening our Nation against our enemies—both from outside and from within. Under his leadership the House adopted, in 1955, the Doyle resolution establishing standards of conduct for House committees in the protection of the rights of witnesses and improving committee procedures.

All of us will recall CLYDE DOYLE's motto, which appeared at the bottom of each letter he signed—"Our Beloved Nation Deserves the Best of Whatever We Are."

This simple, moving expression of faith and service symbolized CLYDE's lifetime philosophy of public service at all levels of government. His long and distinguished record of service in State positions, in civic, legal, cultural, and philanthropic work is well known in Los Angeles County and throughout California.

We will miss CLYDE—his example of dedicated service, his leadership, his cheerful smile, and genuine friendship. To his devoted wife, Lydia, and his family, Mrs. Holifield and I extend our sincere condolences in this time of sorrow.

Mr. RYAN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in this tribute to our late colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, who was one of the most attentive and conscientious Members of the House. During my service here I came to know CLYDE DOYLE as the kind and considerate individual who has been described so accurately today.

His interests were broad and his understanding deep. Although we disagreed on certain issues, he understood that our disagreement was a matter of principle and not personal. He was often helpful to me in explaining the procedures of the House as he occupied his accustomed place and recorded in detail the course of debate. CLYDE DOYLE's daily presence on the floor will be missed by all of us. Mr. Speaker, I extend to Mrs. Doyle and her family my deepest sympathy.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my colleagues in expressing my deep sorrow at the passing last night of the late Honorable CLYDE DOYLE.

A man who served his district, his State, and his country for many years with dedication and devotion, Congressman DOYLE was to us who served with him, above all, a gentleman, with all the virtues that the term implies. As he kept the quiet tenor of his ways, he was unfailing in his courtesy and a model of gentility.

Congressman DOYLE distinguished himself both as second ranking member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities and as a member of the Armed Services Committee. His presence on those committees and in this legislative body will be sorely missed.

My wife joins me in expressing deep sympathy to his widow and family. May they derive some small consolation from the knowledge that their loss is shared by his many friends.

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. Mr. Speaker, among the thousands of public officials whom I have known in my lifetime I have never known one of warmer heart than our beloved deceased colleague, CLYDE DOYLE. It was my privilege to sit next to him on the House Armed Services Committee, for many years, and it was my privilege to meet with him in a prayer group every Thursday morning ever since we came to Congress together in the 81st Congress, 1949. My wife and his wife were closely associated together in the 81st Club and are dear friends. Words are inadequate to express feelings as close and heartfelt as we all feel for CLYDE DOYLE. His statesmanship and leadership in his work in the House Armed Services Committee and in the Un-American Activities Committee will be a lasting memorial to him.

Mr. Speaker, only yesterday CLYDE DOYLE found something nice to say to me about something that I was trying to do. This was characteristic of what he always tried to do—find the good in everybody and try to increase it. All of us have lost a dear friend and the country has lost a great statesman. I am sure I speak for every Member of Congress when I express our deepest sympathy to his beloved widow and family.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, it was with great sadness that I listened to the news of the passing this morning of our colleague and my neighbor from the 23d Congressional District of California.

Throughout his 14 years as a Member of the House of Representatives, CLYDE DOYLE has unwaveringly fought for the kind of America he knew was best for us.

Not only in his own district, but throughout the Los Angeles area—and, in fact, the State of California—Congressman DOYLE has stood out as portraying a man who has always been a credit to the Halls of Congress and to his family. Not once has the slightest impropriety marred his record, although his record of fighting communism made him many enemies who were constantly searching for something with which they might besmirch his fine name.

CLYDE DOYLE's unceasing efforts on the Committee on Un-American Activities are well known. During my 10-year acquaintanceship with him, I have always felt that we were both striving for the same end—a world of freemen, free of totalitarian or Communist dictatorship—although our paths appeared to be at cross purposes on some occasions.

I do not believe there are any among us who will be able to better CLYDE DOYLE's record of dedication, sincerity, and loyalty to the principles of democracy and the welfare of the United States.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my deep sorrow over the death of our esteemed colleague, CLYDE DOYLE. I pay tribute to him as a dedicated Congressman, a patriotic American, and a fine man.

CLYDE DOYLE was the very soul of kindness to me from the first day I came to this House and I took pleasure in having him as a dear friend. He was a man who gained preeminence not by chance and circumstance but by striving and great effort. He earned his own way through high school and college and went on to carve out a distinguished career as an attorney and in public service before winning election to Congress in 1944. As a Member of Congress, he constantly showed forth his heartfelt concern for the safety and security of our Nation and gave his great talents unstintingly to preserve the United States.

I am sure many Members remember with appreciation, as I do, the habit he had of being present on the floor at all times and taking careful, analytical notes on the proceedings. There have been many occasions when his willingness to share his notes has been helpful to me and other Members.

We shall miss CLYDE DOYLE. I want to express my deepest sympathy to his family.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, all of us here in the House of Representatives are saddened by the sudden death of CLYDE DOYLE. The country, the Congress, and the people of his district particularly have suffered a deep loss. In the 31 years I have served in the Congress I have known few men who were as kind and gentle, as tolerant and understanding, so full of good will to all men as was CLYDE DOYLE. Yet there was an intelligent limit to his good will and tolerance. It was for this reason, his deep sense of patriotism and his abhorrence of what was evil and corrupt that he served for 12 years with such distinction on the Committee on Un-American Activities.

CLYDE DOYLE was proud of his native California, and took an active part in charity work, particularly as it pertained to the care and treatment of children.

As an attorney, CLYDE DOYLE was a stickler for perfection. Following graduation from the College of Law of the University of Southern California at Los Angeles in 1917, he was admitted to the bar at Long Beach, Calif.

Aside from serving on the Committee on Un-American Activities here in Congress, CLYDE DOYLE served with distinction with the House Armed Services Committee. Everyone knows in this great body his concern for the servicemen, and that he be properly protected in times of conflict.

The effects of war hit CLYDE DOYLE hard during the last world war as he lost a son, 1st Lt. Clyde Doyle, Jr., who was a member of the Air Force.

Our beloved colleague served on many other special committees of this great body, and each time that he was called on, he served with deep devotion and understanding.

Today I extend to his dear wife and other members of his family my deepest sympathy. A good friend and a great legislator has left this chamber, and we all will miss him deeply.

Mr. LIPSCOMB. Mr. Speaker, the State of California, the Congress, and the Nation have lost an outstanding citizen when our esteemed colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, died suddenly last night.

A Member of the Congress for 18 years, CLYDE was foremost a patriot and a firm believer in the principles on which this great country of ours was founded. He placed a high value on the liberties granted the American people by the Founding Fathers.

CLYDE served as second ranking majority member of the House Un-American Activities Committee and was a rugged opponent of communism. He was an active member of the committee, for he recognized communism as a real threat to his homeland. Similarly, he served with distinction on the House Armed Services Committee. His strength of character and ability will be deeply missed in the House of Representatives.

Not only was CLYDE DOYLE a colleague, but he was a good friend. As members of the California delegation, we shared the pride of those who called themselves "Californians." CLYDE was born in California, educated in California, married to a California girl, and has devoted his life to serving his State.

His endeavors in the public interest were numerous. To mention a few: He was first president of Boy Scout Council of Boy Scouts of America in Long Beach, Calif.; several years chairman of tuberculosis stamp sales; member board of directors of California Conference of Social Work; and honorary member of National Recreation Association. The people of California paid due recognition to this outstanding citizen by reelecting him to the 87th Congress by the largest majority he had ever received—over 93,000.

A devoted husband, CLYDE was also a devoted father and grandfather. To his wife, his daughter, and his entire family, I extend my heartfelt and deepest sympathy.

Mr. ROUSH. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was my friend. What more can one man say about another man? He saw the good in all men. He exemplified in every respect a spirit of genuine friendliness. It did not take a new member long to become acquainted with the quiet and attentive gentleman who sat in a certain seat near the front on the Democratic side every day.

He spoke sincerely and in a brotherly manner to his colleagues. You did not sit beside him long until you were aware that he was a man of God, that he was a patriot, and that he loved his State and his people with a passion. His witness was unmistakably that of a devout, patriotic, and conscientious man who was very mindful of his high calling and grave responsibilities.

We shall all miss CLYDE. I shall especially miss him. I join with my colleagues in expressing sincere and heartfelt condolences to his family and a prayerful hope that God might sustain them in this hour of sorrow.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, I was really stunned this morning when I found the flags here at the Capitol flying at half mast and then learned of the sudden and unexpected passing of my good friend and colleague, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE, of California. I was shocked because it was only last night that CLYDE and I attended the National American Legion dinner at the Sheraton Park Hotel and he appeared to be in excellent health.

I came to know CLYDE DOYLE well during his 17 years as a Member of this body, and considered it a privilege to call him my friend. He was a capable legislator and was held in the highest esteem and respect by all of his colleagues on both sides of the aisle.

At the time of his passing, CLYDE was the ranking Member of the House Un-American Activities Committee. He worked hard to preserve this committee and led the fight against its abolition and attempted denial of funds. He was also a member of the Armed Services Committee and always took an active interest in veterans' affairs.

Congressman DOYLE served his constituency, the State of California and the Nation with honor and distinction, and will be greatly missed by all.

To his dear wife and daughter, I extend my heartfelt sympathy.

Mr. LEGGETT. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep sorrow that I learned of the passing of veteran legislator, adviser, and colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, of my home State of California. CLYDE has not only rendered distinguished service to the California delegation, but also to the people of Los Angeles County, the State of California, and the Nation. The 23d District of California can be proud of the contributions their Representative in Congress has made toward a better Government and a better America.

During 20 years of Federal service, Congressman DOYLE has risen to the first-ranking position of his party on the House Un-American Activities Committee, and likewise he has achieved a high position of respect on the Armed Services Committee.

As a new Member of the Congress, I found CLYDE was interested in the new Member's problems. He was a sage adviser and assisted measurably in the orientation of many of the new Members from our State. The new Members of the California delegation have lost a valued friend.

Congressman DOYLE lived a full life, competing until his last day on the floor of the House of Representatives. The Nation will not soon fill the void herein created.

Mr. WINSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I was shocked and deeply distressed by the sudden death of our able colleague from California, CLYDE DOYLE. The fine tributes that have been paid him here today are well-deserved and true. It has been my privilege to serve with him on the House Armed Services Committee for many years and he was a valued member of the Subcommittee on Real Estate and Construction of which I am Chairman.

I have never known a more sincere Christian gentleman than CLYDE DOYLE, and neither have I ever known a more dedicated and loyal citizen. His contributions as a member of the House Un-American Activities Committee are well known to us all and will, I am confident, have a lasting effect on the security of the country which he loved so well.

I join with the other Members of the House in extending deepest sympathy to his wife and his fine family in their great loss—a loss that is shared by all of us here in the Congress.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE and I began our service in this House on the same day and as a consequence of this and later close association in committee assignments I came to know him very well. Anyone who had the opportunity to work with him, quickly saw his fine character and dedication.

I have never known any Member of this great body more serious about his work than CLYDE DOYLE. I think my colleagues will agree with me that he spent every moment of his busy life working in behalf of others. The kind of legislation he supported most vigorously was that which he felt improved the welfare of his countrymen and gave greater guarantee of the security of his country.

A native Californian, he gave unselfishly of his talents to every program to better the community and State. He was most active in so many such projects it would require pages in this Record to set them down.

He was a distinguished lawyer whose ability was recognized to the extent he was frequently called on to serve in responsible positions where legal training was required. In committee work here in Congress his great experience in this field was apparent in his penetrating examination of the many and varied problems that commanded his interest.

CLYDE DOYLE was highly respected by all who knew him and I think the tribute paid to him this afternoon clearly shows the love of his colleagues for his gentleness, his religious fervor and his strength of character.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, like so many of my colleagues who are rising to pay tribute here today to the memory of Congressman CLYDE DOYLE, I too was deeply saddened by the news of the passing from our midst of this elder statesman and longtime Representative of the 24th District of California, both as a public servant and an American patriot in the finest tradition.

It has been my privilege to serve with Congressman DOYLE only since 1959 when I came to Congress, and his quiet geniality and kindness came through with genuineness and clarity.

Congressman DOYLE had a breadth of human understanding that transcended his wide circle of friends and even the bounds of his constituency. As a member of the Armed Services Committee, he became the defender and protector of all GI's and sought with relentless diligence to secure the enactment of legislation which would permit the correction of military records where servicemen who had received less-than-honorable discharges, had proved themselves more than worthy of honorable civilian status.

I am confident that I speak for all who knew him when I say that he will be remembered with warmth and affection, and I know, too, that the absence of his kindly presence in this Chamber will be felt with equal keenness by his colleagues on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. BRAY. Mr. Speaker, all of us were shocked when we received word this morning that our colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, had died during the night.

I have known CLYDE DOYLE since I first came to Congress more than 12 years ago. I have had the pleasure of serving with him on the Armed Service Committee for more than 10 years. I have also had the pleasant and interesting experience of serving on subcommittees where CLYDE was the chairman.

It was CLYDE who, a few years ago, made the long and difficult fight to bring some fairness and relief to those unfortunate servicemen who had received military discharges that, while not dishonorable, did cast reflection on future years. These discharges were given without a formal court martial, and from a study of these cases it is evident that grave injustice had been done many of our ex-servicemen. CLYDE fought for these unfortunate GI's in a most effective manner. He did not accomplish all that he set out to do because he could not get the legislation acted upon by the other body; yet because of the tireless work and dedication which CLYDE demonstrated, great good has been accomplished not only for the GI's of today, but for years to come.

Our colleague was one of the kindest and most considerate men I have ever known. While CLYDE was a fearless and vigorous warrior for those principles for which he believed, I have never known of him to say an unkind word to or about anyone.

He will be greatly missed and long remembered.

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE's standard for a U.S. Congressman was expressed in a true story he related to me some 10 years ago.

When Mr. DOYLE first sought the Democratic nomination in his southern California district, he was one of several candidates interviewed by a committee representing organized labor. As its final question to each man, the committee asked, "On being elected, would you like to become known as labor's spokesman on Capitol Hill?"

CLYDE DOYLE replied in the negative. He told the committee it was his conception of a Congressman's job to represent all elements of his district. He thus would not want to be a "spokesman" for labor, for business, for veterans, for teachers or for any other special interest.

"I went home that night heavy at heart," Mr. DOYLE recalled. "I felt certain I would now be denied an endorsement that could be vital to my nomination."

It was a matter of some surprise, then, when the labor delegation returned early next day. Its members informed Mr. DOYLE he was being endorsed for Congress. One of them added: "You were the only candidate we talked with who answered the key question correctly."

For 15 years, the House has been well served by the honesty and devotion of our fellow Californian, CLYDE DOYLE. I join scores of colleagues in mourning his loss.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the memory of a good friend and neighbor who served California for many years in the House of Representatives. We all were shocked and saddened by the sudden passing of Congressman CLYDE DOYLE.

Our friend was a most dedicated and conscientious Representative and certainly was among the hardest working Members of this House. When I first came to Congress 4 years ago, one of my first impressions was of CLYDE DOYLE arriving at his office to study his mail and begin the day's work before many of us sat down to breakfast. For 4 years, I was privileged to be a neighbor of CLYDE DOYLE in the Longworth House Office Building, his office being next to mine.

The people of California and the Nation have lost a faithful public servant. CLYDE DOYLE was active in his community all his life. His interest and leadership in community affairs dates back to high school days in Los Angeles when he was a champion debater, newspaper manager, president of the student body and still found time to be the high school baseball team's star pitcher.

Anyone who has earned his way through college and earned a law degree knows how difficult this can be, but CLYDE DOYLE was never afraid of work. He tried every job from delivering newspapers to being a janitor. He is an outstanding example of a man who has pulled himself up by the bootstraps and made a tremendous success of his life.

CLYDE DOYLE always gave of himself to his community and I think that the following summary of his community activities before his election to Congress indicate the great contributions he made:

In 1936 received unanimous award of meritorious citizenship plaque by vote of all the service clubs of Long Beach, Calif., as the most valuable and useful adult citizen in Long Beach; first member of Long Beach Kiwanis Club and organizing president; first president of Boy Scouts of America Council in Long Beach; several years president of Long Beach Tuberculosis stamp sales; member of the board of trustees and legal counsel, Adelaide Tichenor Hospital School and Clinic for Crippled Children; boys secretary, member, board of directors, Long Beach YMCA; member, board of trustees, California Junior Republic, Chino; president Long Beach Recreation Commission for 15 years without pay; first president, Long Beach Coordinating Council, 1934; first president, Long Beach Philharmonic Orchestra Association; honorary member of National Recreation Association; honorary member, California Conference of Social Work; honorary member, Long Beach 20-30 Club; president, Long Beach Trojan Club, U.S.C.; president, Abraham Lincoln Club, Long Beach, for several years; member of Abraham Lincoln Group, Washington, D.C.; Los Angeles juvenile probation officer; examiner of applications for positions of juvenile court probation officer, Los Angeles County, under honorable Curtis D. Wilbur, distinguished judge, juvenile court, later Secretary of Navy under President Hoover; boys counselor and instructor in government and athletics, California Junior Republic, Chino, 1911-14, member, board of trustees since 1920; recipient of honorary plaques, awards, and decorations by several veterans organizations; member, South Gate Chamber of Commerce; member, Huntingpark, Downey, and South Gate YMCA; member of Moose, Eagles; past and presently listed in Who's Who.

In CLYDE DOYLE's passing, the Nation, California, and his immediate congressional district have lost a very conscientious and dedicated Member of Congress.

Mrs. Johnson wishes to join me in extending our heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and her daughter.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my friends from California and others in paying brief but sincere tribute to the memory of our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California, Congressman CLYDE DOYLE. I am saddened indeed to hear of his passing.

CLYDE DOYLE was first elected to the 79th Congress and has rendered many years of outstanding service to our country. He was a great patriot, blessed with a good mind and dedicated to hard work and to the service of his district, State, and Nation.

In the passing of Congressman DOYLE, the House has lost a distinguished Member and I have lost a personal friend. I want to extend an expression of my most sincere sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and to the members of his family. We shall all miss CLYDE DOYLE immensely.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply saddened by the unexpected death of my friend, CLYDE DOYLE, long a Representative in Congress from the State of California. CLYDE DOYLE was one of the finest people I have ever known. He was sincere, studious, thoughtful, and deeply religious. CLYDE DOYLE was compassionate in his consideration of the problems of the people of his district and, indeed, of the problems of the people of the entire Nation. He was all-American in his thinking. He was an outstanding member of the Committee on Armed Services of the House. No one knew more about the cost of the defense of our country than did Congressman DOYLE. His only son lost his life in the defense of this country in World War II. The defense of the United States was not a matter of partisan consideration with CLYDE DOYLE. One of the most stirring speeches I ever heard in this House was made by CLYDE DOYLE more than a dozen years ago. The title of his speech was "Don't Play Politics with Defense."

CLYDE DOYLE also was an outstanding member of the Committee on Un-American Activities. He likewise gave great attention to his duties and responsibilities as a member of that committee. He made an outstanding record there. CLYDE DOYLE loved America and its institutions.

CLYDE DOYLE, as a sort of hobby, kept daily notes on the proceedings of the House. These notes were to be made the basis of a book about the U.S. House of Representatives. He and I talked about his proposed book many times. We last discussed it here on the floor of the House on Monday of this week. On that occasion, he asked me to tell him what I considered to be my own greatest accomplishment in the 15 years I have served in Congress. I told him I was proudest of my authorship in the House of the National Defense Education Act of 1958. Then we discussed what had been done under that act. CLYDE DOYLE told me he was asking the same question he asked me of other Congressmen.

As the Members know, not many good books have been written about the House. CLYDE DOYLE's book would have been a gold mine of information about the House of Representatives. I deeply regret that he cannot finish the book; at the same time, I would like to express the hope that his relatives, or other interested friends, consider publishing that part of the book that is ready for publication or can be easily made ready.

CLYDE DOYLE pursued his hobby of noting the proceedings of the House, and of commenting on those of great interest, with such diligence and with such self-discipline that I am sure the publication of his book would be enlightening and very helpful to students of the Congress and to those who serve here in the future.

Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a gentleman of the highest order. He was an outstanding and effective Member of the House. As a friend, I share the great loss which his family and other friends feel so acutely today.

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that in my opinion no man has more deserved to serve in this body than CLYDE DOYLE. CLYDE DOYLE lived to be of service to others. He loved his fellow man and he served him well. There was not an ounce of venom in him and he had a great store of good will, sympathy, and understanding. This body and the whole country share a great loss with his passing.

Mr. HAGEN of California. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of both myself and my wife Martha, I wish to express our feeling of loss arising from the death of the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE, of California. At the same time I express my sympathy to his beloved family. Truly we share a great loss.

My acquaintanceship with our late beloved colleague began in Long Beach, Calif., in 1932. At the time I was a student at Long Beach Junior College and a member of the Hammurabi Pre-Legal Society. One of our guest speakers was CLYDE DOYLE, who was then only an active practicing attorney. He spoke to us about the flora of the semiarid mountains in the Los Angeles-Long Beach area. I mention this because it demonstrates the versatility of the man and reveals a significant aspect of his character. He loved the outdoors and was an avid naturalist and fisherman. He loved the outdoors because he wanted room and a lack of distraction to meditate upon his personality and problems and relationship to both God and man. He shared this experience with a son who was unfortunately killed during the war.

In the Congress and elsewhere the descriptive noun, "gentleman," is used in somewhat formal and perfunctory fashion with no particular effort to plumb its meaning or to properly identify the recipient of that description. The dictionary definition of "gentleman" is "A man of good breeding, kindness, courtesy, and honor; a man having worthy ideals and refinement of thought and action." CLYDE DOYLE certainly deserved this description. No higher compliment can be paid to him.

CLYDE was soft spoken and courteous. I have spoken with him many times about many things, including political campaigns and controversial matters of government, and never once did he utter an unkind word about any other person. It was not in his nature to be unkind to anyone and very few of us can boast of this characteristic of a truly religious and humanitarian man. Politics and government and business would be less of a jungle if there were more men like CLYDE engaged therein.

Mr. DOYLE was a great man. He utilized his career as a Congressman solely for doing the greatest good for the greatest number without any thought of self-return or self-advancement. He will be missed by the Nation he loved so dearly.

Of him and others like him a poet has said:

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, we have suffered a great loss because of the death of our distinguished colleague, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE.

His service to his Nation and to his native State of California has been outstanding and of great benefit to all of us.

If there was one quality which Congressman DOYLE possessed more than any other, I believe it was compassion. He understood his fellow humans, their wants, their needs, their dreams and their hopes. He had the remarkable ability of seeing the best in others and in understanding another person's point of view.

His citizenship was outstanding, and he followed up his words with constructive deeds. It is no accident that Congressman DOYLE received so many awards for outstanding citizenship. He believed in being a good citizen in an active way, in wholehearted participation in efforts to improve the lot of those less fortunate than himself.

Because of the time that CLYDE DOYLE spent on this earth, our Nation and his native State are better places to live. He lived a full, rich life, a life filled to the brim with concern and compassion for those with whom he came in contact.

All of us will miss his wise words, his gentleness, his kindness, his understanding. It is a privilege to have known him and to have counted him as a friend.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, I share the admiration that has been expressed here today for the late CLYDE DOYLE, of California. It was my good fortune to have known him quite well and to have been closely associated with him in many respects during his service here. I cannot think of a man with whom I have served who commanded such universal respect on the part of his fellow Members. He was courteous, forthright, sincere, dedicated and energetic.

I extend my deepest sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the family in their bereavement.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, many men who come to the Congress, or serve in the Senate of the United States, take pride in the fact that through some public work they are able to create, as it were, back in their own territory, a monument to their service in the Congress of the United States, service to their country. All of us like to think that posterity will do us honor for what we have done here, and the vanity which is a part of almost every personality I have known here is given so much satisfaction when we see a public building or other edifice with our name on it. But I think the real monuments that we build are the sermons that we preach with our lives.

When I heard the news about CLYDE DOYLE I was on the way from my room to the House Office Building. As I parked my car one of the policemen said to me, "It's too bad about CLYDE DOYLE, he was such a fine fellow." I hurried on to breakfast and a fellow Congressman from a State far removed said, "CLYDE DOYLE was a Christian gentleman." Later, an elevator boy made a remark to a group of us that, "Mr. DOYLE was certainly a wonderful gentleman." I am sure that from the great beyond where good and fine men go, he must somehow know of the magnificent impression for good he made here with his life. He preached a sermon for good, for example, and for guidance. His monument is a living monument that will live on in the hearts and the minds of those of us who were privileged to know him—not just Congressmen and Senators, but people who worked in and around the Capitol regardless of their particular capacity or calling.

We often speak of a public servant as being dedicated. CLYDE DOYLE lived the word. He kept an hour by hour account of everything that happened here, and while he did not make many speeches, whenever he did talk, he was accurate and he was listened to.

Today is a day of sadness, for we have lost a friend; but today is also a day of gladness that we had the privilege of knowing him and I am sure I express the sentiments of the Members of the House of Representatives when I say that I am glad that CLYDE DOYLE lived. I am glad he lived because his life was good for the Nation, good for his district, good for his people and good for his many friends as a monument of integrity and example.

To his family, Mrs. Hemphill and I extend our deepest sympathy.

Mr. RHODES of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I was deeply saddened this morning to hear the news of the death of my friend and respected colleague, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE, of California.

For almost 20 years in the Congress, CLYDE has served his country and his constituents well. He was a dedicated American who loved his country and cherished the goals of progressive and humanitarian legislation.

CLYDE, as we all knew him, was a man of the highest character and integrity. He was a tireless worker with a sincere and ardent interest in the people of his district and of the Nation.

He was a modest and mild-mannered man. Even when he was the target for unfair criticism he was tolerant, and patient toward those who opposed him.

He reflected integrity on the Congress. The stature and memory of CLYDE DOYLE will stand as a monument to a noble and great man, and should serve as a deterrent to those who seek to incite the public against the Congress and discredit it as an institution and an instrument of the people in our democratic society.

To his beloved wife, Lydia, his daughter and grandchildren, Mrs. Rhodes and I express our deepest sympathy at their great loss. I join with all of my colleagues in sharing their grief and sorrow.

Mr. POOL. Mr. Speaker, I join with the other Members in expressing my sorrow on the passing of CLYDE DOYLE.

While I have only known CLYDE for the past 2½ months, I was fortunate enough to serve with him on the Committee on Un-American Activities and valued him as a personal friend as well as a colleague. Here in the House, on many occasions, CLYDE invited me to sit with him during the sessions. As a freshman Congressman, I asked him to explain the various motions and activities here on the floor. CLYDE not only answered my questions, but pointed out to me many other matters that he felt would help me in my service as a Congressman.

I discovered that he loved people and found some good in everyone. Words cannot express my sentiments to his loved ones in the sorrow that all of us felt at his passing. I will miss his counsel, the Nation will miss his service, and to his wife and family, I can only extend my deepest sympathy in their bereavement.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues in expressing my sincerest and deepest sympathy to Mrs. Lydia Doyle on the passing of her husband, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE, longtime Representative of California's 23d District.

I have known CLYDE DOYLE for a number of years and his death leaves a void that will be difficult if not impossible to fill. His long and illustrious career of public service to the people of the Los Angeles County and southern California area stands as a tribute to his qualities of integrity and devotion to principle.

CLYDE DOYLE's memory will serve us all as inspiration in the years ahead as an example of the kind of public servant we need in these difficult times.

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as the years go by and our colleagues come and go, there are some with whom we feel a particular closeness. So it was with CLYDE DOYLE and me. I cannot tell you why and I doubt if he could either, but there was something about it that always drew us together. Perhaps an expression of the younger generation particularly fits the case. They would say "we clicked."

Times without number I have gone over to sit beside him in the place he habitually occupied. I used to marvel at his prolific note taking. I do not suppose any man in the Congress kept as copious a record of what went on here on the floor. I might add that I doubt that anyone among us had as good a record of attendance.

I cannot remember when CLYDE was not here, faithful and attentive. It is significant that he carried this on right up through yesterday—the last day of his life. I shall miss him. We shall all miss him. My sympathy goes especially to his widow and the surviving members of his family. My sympathy, too, goes to his California colleagues who will miss him perhaps more than any of us.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I was shocked to learn of our colleague Congressman CLYDE DOYLE's untimely passing when I arrived at my office this morning. I had an opportunity to have the pleasure of talking with Mr. DOYLE yesterday concerning matters in connection with the Un-American Activities Committee where he so ably served as vice chairman. I want to join the delegation from California and the entire Congress in expressing my deepest sympathy to his family.

Certainly there was no member of Congress that was held in higher esteem than the late Congressman CLYDE DOYLE. I had the privilege and pleasure of getting acquainted with Congressman

DOYLE when his son who was serving as a pilot with the U.S. Air Force, located at Myrtle Beach Air Force Base, S.C., during World War II was killed. This young officer was on a reconnaissance flight over the ocean. He was within a mile of the airbase at Myrtle Beach when his plane made a nose dive and went out of control. The young officer and his plane crashed into the Atlantic Ocean and I do not believe his body was ever recovered. I do not think I have ever felt quite so bad as I did when Congressman DOYLE arrived at Myrtle Beach Air Force Base, which is located in my district. Every effort had been made to locate his son, but all were unsuccessful.

The State of California and the Nation has lost one of its finest legislators, and we shall all remember how dedicated he was to his work as a Representative here in the National House of Representatives.

Again, I want to express my deepest sympathy to the members of the late Congressman DOYLE's family.

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a Christian gentleman. One of the best, down to earth, commonsense talks on Christian faith I ever heard anywhere was delivered by CLYDE DOYLE to the House Christian Breakfast Group. He attended regularly and always left a profound impression when he talked. His intense belief in Christianity and love of these United States made of him a bitter foe of atheistic communism.

CLYDE DOYLE believed the best way to fight communism was to fill the hearts and minds of our youth with Americanism.

I am glad I knew and associated with CLYDE DOYLE. He was a great American and dedicated to making this Congress the greatest institution on earth. We have lost a truly great man. Mrs. Dorn joins in my deepest sympathy to his wonderful and devoted family.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, California, the Congress, and our Nation have lost a dedicated public servant in the untimely passing of our colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, of California. His patience, courageous loyalty to his convictions, and his ever willingness to help others, were attributes we always admired. Even those who sometimes disagreed with some of his views respected his devotion to those principles in which he believed and by which he lived.

I shall remember him as the two of us, the day before his passing, walked down to the well of the House to vote—he to vote one way, I the opposite. We chatted as friends, and he, as the elder statesman he was, gave to me advice on many things concerning the welfare of our community. This was typical of the man: never to hate, never to be bitter, never to appear superior in wisdom, though he was a wise man.

CLYDE DOYLE was a friend to all of us, and he will be truly missed.

My deepest sympathy goes to the members of his family.

Mr. DAGUE. Mr. Speaker, the Grim Reaper stands at our elbow as a constant reminder that this life is uncertain and fleeting and that we are never sure when the call may come to each one of us.

Yesterday we joined with our departed colleague in the important work of this House and we saw him leave at the close of day in apparent health and strength. And then today we learned with grief and consternation of his untimely demise.

Passing this way but once it behooves all of us to have a bit more concern for the amenities as we meet, even casually, those who are our associates on this life's journey. In that particular, CLYDE DOYLE was truly one of this earth's noblemen and his qualities of greatness stem from an innate kindness and the traits of a gentleman. Our colleague and brother was a kind man, a gentle man, and withal a representative of the people who walked in the fear and admonition of the Lord.

As the vice president of our Christian fellowship group he led our meditations on occasion and demonstrated by his humble but nonetheless forceful witnessing that he had made his peace with his Maker and that his life would continue to be one of dedication in the service of the Nation and his fellow men. We who have passed through the dark valley know something of the heartbreak and anguish that now assail his loved ones and our sympathy goes out to his bereaved helpmate and the other members of his family with whom we are joined in mourning the passing of a great public servant, who was also a fine Christian gentleman.

Mrs. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, Representative CLYDE DOYLE was a close personal friend of mine. I shall miss Mr. DOYLE not only because he was one of the kindest and most thoughtful of persons, but because he was a man dedicated to helping his fellow man.

Many of his family continue to live in my congressional district. I know most of them personally. To Mrs. Doyle and his daughter and to the other members of his family I extend my heartfelt sympathies.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. Speaker, being only a freshman Member of this honorable body, I have not had the privilege of knowing CLYDE DOYLE as those who have already expressed their sentiments. Ours was only a casual acquaintanceship. But I do know that he was a supporter of statehood for Hawaii when we were knocking at the congressional doors for admission into the Union.

As a representative of Hawaii's grateful people, I join in grieving over the loss of CLYDE DOYLE, of whom it can aptly be said that he, too, like his son, gave up his life for love of his country and his fellow men.

While I fully realize that human words, no matter how sweet, cannot beguile Mrs. Doyle and her family from the great sorrow that must be theirs, I wish to add my expressions of sympathy and condolences to those already expressed. I do hope and pray that they will derive some comfort from the fact that there are many friends and beneficiaries of his handiwork who share in their immeasurable loss.

Mr. BURKHALTER. Mr. Speaker, today our country, our State, and our Nation lost a real champion of democracy, with the sudden passing of our colleague, CLYDE DOYLE. Little did we realize that when he answered the rollcall on the floor yesterday that we were witnessing the final vote to be cast by this sincere, dedicated legislator. His 16 years were spent in devotion to what he felt was the right answer to the many legislative decisions that he faced. This record of accomplishment has left its mark of sincerity upon his contemporaries for time immemorial.

It has only been my privilege to serve with him for a short time on the Hill. Even though this is my first term my colleague CLYDE DOYLE has found the time to drop by my office and ask if there was any way in which he could be of assistance to me or my staff in helping us to get started with our future endeavors in representing the district.

This was the fabric of the man; he always had time for his fellow man.

Mrs. Burkhalter joins with me in expressing our heartfelt sympathy to his wife and daughter and her family in the loss of a devoted husband and father.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, it was with profound sorrow that all of us who knew and served with our late colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, learned of his death.

He was a man of the most unswerving dedication to the concepts of Christianity and patriotism. I have served with him on the Armed Services Committee and have observed his unflinching devotion to duty, there and on the floor of the House of Representatives. Along with people the world over who are joined in the mutual goal of fighting communism I am acquainted with the outstanding work he did as acting chairman and longtime member of the Committee on Un-American Activities. In this work he never forgot that the dignity of man is priceless even to the most unfortunate among us.

May God comfort Mr. DOYLE's family with the memory that he was a Christian, a gentleman and a patriot, and one with whom we in the House of Representatives were privileged in the highest sense to serve, a man whose special attributes will be deeply missed by us, and by freedom-loving people everywhere.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. Speaker, love of family, love of country, complete dedication to its welfare, compassion for his fellow man; kindly, gentle, and always fair in his dealings with others. These were the distinguishing characteristics of a warm and humble human being whose presence will be sorely missed by all the Members of this body. Serving with CLYDE DOYLE was an experience of personal enrichment to all who shared the privilege. Much has been said here today attesting to the high regard in which he was held by the Members of the House of Representatives. Death at any time shocks those close to the person whose life ceases. But, Mr. Speaker, I know the members of Congressman DOYLE's family can read our own personal expressions of sorrow and, from them, gain great pride that the one they loved so dearly was so universally esteemed. I join in expressing my sincerest sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and all the other members of our late colleague's family.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, nothing can quite compensate or fully console the Members of this House or the people of the country, for a loss so severe as the sudden and unexpected death on March 14 of our colleague CLYDE DOYLE, of California. Yet there was an aspect of CLYDE DOYLE's successful, fruitful, and effective life, that provides us all with some modicum of comfort in our bereavement. For CLYDE DOYLE had recognition and respect from the people he served for 17 years in this House as the Representative from the 23d District of California. Moreover, while his services were constant and distinctive and both the quality and the quantity of his effort for his district, for California, and for his country, were massive and rich in results, he had the satisfaction, through the years, of public appreciation.

Not only was he appreciated and admired by his constituents who nine times elected him to this House, but he knew the admiration and affection of his colleagues here; and the leadership held him in high esteem. So that as he moved among us to the very last, CLYDE DOYLE was rich in honors, in the respect of his colleagues, and in commendations from those who were close to him, the late Speaker Sam Rayburn for example, who on occasion evaluated as exemplary his sound and steady and unflagging workmanship as an American legislator.

For 17 years, as I know of my personal knowledge, he kept a daily diary of the doings of the Congress. This, it seems to me, could be an invaluable personal record, rich in observations, commentary, anecdotes. For CLYDE DOYLE had a feel for history and events and a sensitive appreciation of the characteristics of those around him and their reactions. I hope someday that his diary may become a public record, for inevitably it will throw the light of a fine imagination on the chronicle of our times in the House. Those of us who knew CLYDE DOYLE well, know also that the diary will have about it a kindness and a sympathy for his fellow man that will cause hurt to no one should it ever achieve publication.

It may perhaps be said that those of us who were nearest to him knew him for qualities and accomplishments that cannot be found in reports and statements appearing as matters of routine in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I, for one, especially regarded him highly for his services on legislative matters, affecting savings and loan problems and banking. He was an indefatigable worker and had what some of our staff people like to call a knowledge in depth of the matters that came before him. When he discussed a problem of legislation that touched on the armed services, for example—he was a member of the committee—he was persuasive, articulate, informed, and sound.

Similarly, in his 12 years as a member of the House Un-American Activities Committee, he demonstrated an understanding of this profoundly controversial problem that revealed not only the importance of the committee and the need for it, but gave confidence to us all that its management, its reports, and its decisions, would meet high standards of justice. For CLYDE DOYLE was not only a first-class lawyer, he was also a person for whom justice and fairplay had absolute meanings. And many of us have already commented on his gentleness, his sensitive human feelings, and his broad tolerance. These qualities in our colleague made him an outstanding friend of a whole spectrum of public causes in which he was constantly and often brilliantly active: from the YMCA in his district to the California Philharmonic Orchestra Association, and from the Boy Scouts to the Kiwanis Club. The list of his affiliations make a column or more of fine print, and I think it can be said, that all of them felt the beneficial influence of his help, his counsel, and his leadership. No wonder that at one time the inter-allied Council of Service Clubs, of Long Beach, accorded him the Meritorious Citizenship Award as the most valuable and useful citizen.

That accolade, "most valuable and useful citizen," best sums up the superb career of CLYDE DOYLE. It is good to know that he knew he had the praise and approbation of his fellow man and that everywhere he was regarded with honor and affection.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, I was profoundly shocked and deeply grieved upon learning of the death of my colleague from California, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE.

Those of us who had the privilege of knowing and working with him always respected his devotion to duty, the sincerity of his convictions, and his unceasing effort, as he explained it, "to find true goals for lasting values."

In his day-to-day relationships with people, CLYDE DOYLE always showed the understanding, patience, and humility that endeared him to so many of us. Moreover, though at times we disagreed on certain issues that arose in this distinguished House, I never found him to be disagreeable. His untimely passing is a great loss to California and the Nation. Perhaps we can find solace in the fact that the memory of our colleague and his accomplishments shall long remain, untouched by the forgetfulness of time.

Mrs. Roosevelt joins me in expressing sincere sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the family.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Speaker, out of respect to our departed colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE], I include a prayer in the RECORD.

This prayer which I offer, Mr. Speaker, was delivered in the House of Representatives on May 6, 1913, by the then Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D.D. It was offered on behalf of a deceased Member of Congress of that day and it has seemed to me it expresses in plain but very sincere words the emotion, sympathy and deep sense of loss which all Members of this body, some 50 years later, have experienced in connection with the death of our dear and honored colleague, CLYDE DOYLE.

The prayer I offer reads:

We come to Thee, O God our heavenly Father, with hearts bowed in sorrow, because death, always mysterious and unbidden, has visited this congressional body and taken from its midst a Member who was peculiarly fitted by natural gifts, education, and experience to serve his people and his country. But Thou art God; Thou knowest the beginning and the end; Thou hast ordered all things, and Thou doest all things well. Comfort us, his people, the stricken wife and children, by the eternal faith revealed to the world in the life, death, and resurrection of the Christ who thus brought to light life and immortality in Thee.

Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day;
Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away;
Change and decay in all around I see;
O Thou who changest not, abide with me.

Amen.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. Speaker, our Nation has suffered a great loss in the passing of our colleague, CLYDE DOYLE. To know CLYDE DOYLE was to love him. I have never met a more kindly or genuine person in my life.

During my first term in the Congress I was informed that there were no assigned seats in the House of Representatives. While this was true, CLYDE DOYLE had his own seat and everyone was aware of it. When the House was in session, he was nearly always sitting in it.

This kind and intelligent man displayed a devotion to duty that was an example to all of us. He possessed one of the finest attendance records in the House.

The thing that I shall remember most about CLYDE DOYLE is the counsel he gave me when I first came to the Congress 2 years ago on his practice of accumulating the Chaplain's prayers and sending them out to the ministers of the churches in his district. "Chaplain Braskamp says a wonderful prayer," CLYDE informed me, "and I feel that the ministers in my district in California will find his prayers spiritual and helpful."

CLYDE DOYLE was a great Christian and a great American and a friend to all of us. I know that his presence in the House brought out the best in all of us just as his final words in letters to his constituents, "our beloved Nation deserves the best of whatever we are," attempted to bring out the best in them.

I extend to his family my profound sympathy in this hour of their great loss and sorrow.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, it was a saddening shock to learn of the passing of CLYDE DOYLE, of California. My office and his have been located on the same corridor for a number of years. Many times it has been my privilege to walk across to the House floor with him. Only a few days ago I stopped by and visited him in his new more spacious office suite which is on the back corner of the same corridor in the Longworth Building. He was quite proud of this new office and showed me through it, pointing out all of its advantageous points.

The first time I had ever known CLYDE DOYLE well was a few years ago when a congressional group visited the city of New York. It was a spring 2-day trip. We traveled with our families together by train. I came to know him and the members of his family on this New York tour. He was a kindly, genuine, and sincere man. I never heard him utter an unkind word about anyone. He was a dedicated public servant. He possessed humility, gentleness, and an even temper.

My sympathy goes out to his companion and helpmate and other members of his family. A true friend, he will be greatly missed by his colleagues on the floor of the House.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a truly noble man. He was a credit to this House, to his State, and to his Nation. All of us were honored to have been his colleagues. CLYDE was too big for pettiness; he always had time for little acts of kindness and courtesy; and he went out of his way to help the new Members. CLYDE DOYLE had a deep belief in democracy and in the rights and freedoms of individual men. Democratic government works because of men like him.

I shall always remember this good man as a friend and as a fine public servant.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MARCH 14, 1963

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, and was called to order by the Vice President.

Rev. Kenneth J. Sharp, canon, the Washington Cathedral, Washington, D.C., offered the following prayer:

O gracious Father, since it is of Thy mercy that another day is added to our lives, we here dedicate both our souls and bodies to Thee and Thy service. Grant, we beseech Thee, that this day may be to us one of healthful work and progress. Guide, we pray Thee, all those to whom Thou hast committed the government of this Nation. Grant at this time to the President of these United States, the Senate, and all others who are engaged in government, special gifts of wisdom and understanding, of counsel and strength, that, upholding what is right and following what is true, they may in their wisdom follow Thy holy will.

Kindle, we pray Thee, in the hearts of all men the true love of peace; and guide with Thy strong and peaceful wisdom those who take counsel for the nations of the earth. Guide them, we pray, into the way of justice and truth, and establish among them the peace which is the fruit of righteousness.

O blessed Lord God, who didst reveal Thyself to bring abundant life to all mankind, we pray Thee that all who here on earth possess the abundance of this world may desire it so keenly for others, that unjust conditions may become intolerable, and that all who love Thee may become rich in their concern for justice and equality toward all men. O Thou who hast created man in Thine own image, give all in authority the strength fearlessly to contend against evil, and to make no peace with oppression; and that we may reverently use our freedom, help us to employ it in the maintenance of justice among men in our country and all nations.

Grant us, O Lord, to pass this day in gladness and peace, without stumbling and without stain; that, reaching the eventide victorious over all temptation, we may praise Thee, the eternal God, who art blessed, and dost govern all things, world without end. Amen.

The grace of our Lord, Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost be with us all, evermore. Amen.
